We attended AMD's flagship Advancing AI event (AAI26) in San Francisco yesterday and left feeling much more constructive on the company's end-to-end compute product portfolio (semis + systems + software), upcoming product roadmaps, and its strengthening AI ecosystem partnerships (with companies like Anthropic, OpenAI, Meta, and more). As usual, AMD also launched several new products at this year's event, with the most notable releases including its 6th Gen EPYC CPUs ("Venice"), Instinct MI4XX series GPUs, and Helios AI rack-scale solutions (other launches included Ryzen AI Embedded X100s and Kria AI SOM, among others). However, in our view, the real key takeaways from this year's event were as follows: (1) Management raised its AI accelerator TAM forecast to ~$1.4T by 2030, up from the >$1T estimate it laid out at its Nov-25 Analyst Day and the >$500B by 2028 outlook from last year's event (AAI25). The expansion in TAM primarily stems from the proliferation of agentic AI applications, which are driving higher aggregate demand across GPU and CPU markets (see Figure 1). (2) Management also raised its data center CPU TAM forecast to ~$220B by 2030 (>50% server CPU CAGR through 2030), reflecting a $100B increase from the $120B outlined on the company's 1Q26 earnings call and a nearly 4x increase from the $60B indicated at its Nov-25 Analyst Day (see Figure 2). (3) AMD confirmed that its MI450 series GPUs and Helios rack-scale systems would begin shipping at the end of this quarter, with a more aggressive ramp into 4Q26 and 1H27. We think first shipments at the end of September were a touch later than market expectations, but believe this is relatively inconsequential as multiple GWs of MI450 are scheduled for deployment through CY27/CY28 (across Anthropic, OpenAI, and Meta). Management also further clarified that it intentionally built the ramp this way as it would allow ODMs to fine-tune manufacturing (if needed) while also aligning the ramp with customer data center builds. (4) AMD believes this is the strongest and broadest product portfolio it has ever had, and at a high level, we think AMD's expansive silicon portfolio — which spans data center EPYC CPUs, Instinct GPUs, and Helios rack-scale systems, as well as Ryzen AI and edge/embedded processors — positions the company to capture AI opportunities across virtually every vertical, from frontier model training in the data center to agentic workloads, edge computing, and client/physical AI. All told, we believe this year's event uniquely highlighted how AMD is continuing to close the gap with larger GPU peers, while at the same time benefiting from accelerating trends in CPU and ancillary markets.

- AI Accelerator TAM raised to ~$1.4T by 2030 (up from >$1T prior), driven by AI-related compute demand broadening into agentic AI workloads… AMD raised its AI accelerator TAM forecast to ~$1.4T by 2030, which implies a >45% CAGR over the next 5 years (from ~$200B in 2025). This marks a meaningful step-up from the >$1T estimate laid out at the company's Nov-25 Analyst Day and the > $500B outlook provided at last year's AAI event. The upward revision primarily reflects AMD's belief that AI-related compute demand is expanding beyond model training into inference and, increasingly, agentic AI workloads. The argument here is that as agentic applications proliferate across enterprise and consumer use cases, they will drive higher aggregate demand not just for GPUs but across the compute stack, including CPUs — and AMD's Instinct GPU and EPYC CPU franchises give the company multiple avenues to benefit from this same secular tailwind. All told, we think the higher AI TAM forecast reflects management's rising confidence in the breadth and durability of the AI buildout through the end of the decade — a net positive for our entire sector. We remain of the view though that AI ASIC/XPU growth will continue to outpace DC GPU growth through 2030, which should trim GPU TAM share from ~85% in CY25 to ~60-70% by 2030. This would imply that the GPU TAM CAGR is slightly lower than the overall AI accelerator TAM CAGR, likely closer to the ~40% range, with AMD likely gaining share (from a <5% level in CY25). If we were to conservatively assume that GPU share of the overall AI accelerator TAM sits at ~60% in 2030 and that AMD captures 15% of that GPU share, it would imply DC GPU revenues potentially being in the $125B range, which is considerably above current Street consensus estimates of ~$94B...

- Data center CPU TAM raised to ~$220B by 2030, up from $120B outlined on the 1Q26 earnings call and slightly higher than buyside estimates (~$200B)… AMD also raised its data center CPU TAM forecast to ~$220B by 2030, which implies a >50% CAGR over the next 5 years (from ~$26B in 2025). The new TAM figure came in a touch higher than some of the buyside bogeys we heard heading into the event (~$200B) and marks a $100B increase from the ~$120B figure outlined on the company's 1Q26 earnings call just a few months ago. It also reflects a nearly 4x increase from the $60B indicated at its Nov-25 Analyst Day last year. We think the magnitude and pace of these successive raises are notable in their own right, but unsurprising when considering how inference and agentic workloads will naturally require substantial amounts of general-purpose compute alongside GPUs to handle orchestration and data processing tasks. While the implied TAM CAGR now sits at >50%, we think additional share capture could fuel an even higher growth rate for AMD's server CPU business. If we were to conservatively assume in-line growth, AMD's server CPU revenues could potentially reach $85B+ in 2030, which, in combination with DC GPU revenues in the ~$125B range (see prior bullet), could yield total data center segment revenues in the $200B+ range for CY30 (considerably higher than current Street forecasts of ~$122B).

- MI450 GPUs / Helios rack-scale system start shipping in Sep-26, with an aggressive ramp into 4Q26 and 1H27… AMD confirmed that its MI450 series GPUs and Helios rack-scale systems would begin shipping at the end of 3Q26 — in September, specifically — with a more aggressive ramp into 4Q26 and 1H27. While first shipments in September may have been slightly later than what was broadly expected heading into the event, we view it as relatively inconsequential as multiple GWs of MI450 capacity are already scheduled for deployment through CY27. In other words, the demand pipeline remains robust, and that is ultimately what matters most for the trajectory of the ramp, and thus AMD fundamentals — not the precise start date. For what it is worth, management also clarified that the timing was a deliberate design choice rather than a sign of execution slippage. Staging the ramp this way gives ODM partners room to fine-tune manufacturing if needed, while also aligning shipments with customers' own data center build-out schedules.

- AMD believes this is the strongest and broadest product portfolio it has ever had, and we are inclined to agree… AMD's expansive silicon portfolio, which spans data center EPYC CPUs, Instinct GPUs, and Helios rack-scale systems, as well as Ryzen AI and edge/embedded processors, positions the company to capture AI opportunities across virtually every vertical, from frontier model training to agentic workloads, edge computing, and physical AI. What particularly stood out to us at this year's event was that AMD is increasingly able to offer customers a full-stack solution — silicon, rack-scale integration, and open software (ROCm) — which, in theory, expands the dollar content AMD can capture per deployment. This breadth also provides a natural hedge against the uneven pace of any one end market, allowing AMD to participate in AI buildout upside wherever demand materializes — whether that's hyperscale training clusters, enterprise inference, autonomous robotics, or on-device AI at the edge.

Investment Thesis, Valuation and Risks

Advanced Micro Devices (Neutral; Price Target: $385.00)

Investment Thesis

Although AMD has improved its competitiveness across CPU and GPU products with Ryzen, EPYC, and Radeon platforms and is on track to improve its market share and drive meaningful revenue growth in the near term, we believe long-term share gains are less certain. In addition, AMD will have to invest heavily in operating expense (especially R&D) in order to keep pace with the market leaders. While we are encouraged by AMD's execution, we remain Neutral as shares appear to be nearly fully valued.

Valuation

Our Dec-26 PT of $385 assumes shares trade at a ~35x P/E multiple (in line with peer multiples) applied to ~$11 of earnings power exiting CY26.

Risks to Rating and Price Target

AMD typically derives ~50% of its revenue from the core PC end market, which is highly correlated with macroeconomic conditions. If the PC end market is weaker/stronger than expected, this could lead to a decrease/increase in microprocessor and GPU shipments, which could result in a downward/upward revision of our revenue and EPS estimates for AMD.

AMD competes with Intel and NVIDIA in the microprocessor and graphics markets, respectively. Therefore, any material share gains/losses could result in upside / downside to our revenue and EPS estimates, which could cause us to reassess our Neutral rating on AMD.

Explanation of Equity Research Ratings, Designations and Analyst(s) Coverage Universe:
J.P. Morgan uses the following rating system: Overweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will outperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); Neutral (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will perform in line with the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); and Underweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe. NR is Not Rated. In this case, J.P. Morgan has removed the rating and, if applicable, the price target, for this stock because of either a lack of a sufficient fundamental basis or for legal, regulatory or policy reasons. The previous rating and, if applicable, the price target, no longer should be relied upon. An NR designation is not a recommendation or a rating. Some stocks under coverage have a rating but no price target; in these cases, we expect the stock will outperform/perform in line/underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe of the relevant duration of the region. In our Asia (ex-Australia and ex-India) and U.K. small- and mid-cap Equity Research, each stock's expected total return is compared to the expected total return of a benchmark country market index, not to those Research Analysts' coverage universe. General: Additional information is available upon request. The information in this material has been obtained from sources believed to be reliable. While all reasonable care has been taken to ensure that the facts stated in this material are accurate and that the forecasts, opinions and expectations contained herein are fair and reasonable, JPMorgan Chase & Co. or its affiliates and/or subsidiaries (collectively J.P. Morgan) make no representations or warranties whatsoever to the completeness or accuracy of the material provided, except with respect to any disclosures relative to J.P. Morgan and the Research Analyst's involvement with the issuer that is the subject of the material. Accordingly, no reliance should be placed on the accuracy, fairness or completeness of the information contained in this material. There may be certain discrepancies with data and/or limited content in this material as a result of calculations, adjustments, translations to different languages, and/or local regulatory restrictions, as applicable. These discrepancies should not impact the overall investment analysis, views and/or recommendations of the subject company(ies) that may be discussed in the material. Artificial intelligence tools may have been used in the preparation of this material, including assisting in data analysis, pattern recognition, and content drafting for research material. J.P. Morgan accepts no liability whatsoever for any loss arising from any use of this material or its contents, and neither J.P. Morgan nor any of its respective directors, officers or employees, shall be in any way responsible for the contents hereof, apart from the liabilities and responsibilities that may be imposed on them by the relevant regulatory authority in the jurisdiction in question, or the regulatory regime thereunder. Opinions, forecasts or projections contained in this material represent J.P. Morgan's current opinions or judgment as of the date of the material only and are therefore subject to change without notice. Periodic updates may be provided on companies/industries based on company-specific developments or announcements, market conditions or any other publicly available information. There can be no assurance that future results or events will be consistent with any such opinions, forecasts or projections, which represent only one possible outcome. Furthermore, such opinions, forecasts or projections are subject to certain risks, uncertainties and assumptions that have not been verified, and future actual results or events could differ materially. The value of, or income from, any investments referred to in this material may fluctuate and/or be affected by changes in exchange rates. All pricing is indicative as of the close of market for the securities discussed, unless otherwise stated. Past performance is not indicative of future results. Accordingly, investors may receive back less than originally invested. This material is not intended as an offer or solicitation for the purchase or sale of any financial instrument. The opinions and recommendations herein do not take into account individual client circumstances, objectives, or needs and are not intended as recommendations of particular securities, financial instruments or strategies to particular clients. This material may include views on structured securities, options, futures and other derivatives. These are complex instruments, may involve a high degree of risk and may be appropriate investments only for sophisticated investors who are capable of understanding and assuming the risks involved. The recipients of this material must make their own independent decisions regarding any securities or financial instruments mentioned herein and should seek advice from such independent financial, legal, tax or other adviser as they deem necessary. J.P. Morgan may trade as a principal on the basis of the Research Analysts' views and research, and it may also engage in transactions for its own account or for its clients' accounts in a manner inconsistent with the views taken in this material, and J.P. Morgan is under no obligation to ensure that such other communication is brought to the attention of any recipient of this material. Others within J.P. Morgan, including Strategists, Sales staff and other Research Analysts, may take views that are inconsistent with those taken in this material. Employees of J.P. Morgan not involved in the preparation of this material may have investments in the securities (or derivatives of such securities) mentioned in this material and may trade them in ways different from those discussed in this material. This material is not an advertisement for or marketing of any issuer, its products or services, or its securities in any jurisdiction.
