Rates - Asia ex-Japan

Maintain long CHF/JPY trade with a high conviction

SNB's interventions are likely to be measured rather than aggressive; MOF remains vigilant on FX, but no further escalation from last week

The trade

Long CHF/JPY with a high conviction level of 4/5, with a target of 206.50 by end-June (entry at 200.20 on 30 April 2026).

Rationale

SNB Chairman Schlegel's speech reaffirmed to the market that the central bank is willing to intervene in the FX market, particularly in view of increased CHF appreciation pressures stemming from the escalation of the Middle East conflict. There has also been little change in tone on FX intervention over the last few months ("greater" or "higher" willingness to intervene since March). It is difficult to predict the timing and size of intervention on a daily basis from publicly available SNB data. Monthly FX reserves data, adjusted for FX and portfolio valuation effects, do not suggest a meaningful pick up in FX intervention activity in March or April, although sporadic action is likely to have occurred, in our view. We believe EUR/CHF below 0.91 represents a level of caution for the market, as the pair recently rebounded after entering the 0.91–0.90 range.

However, Schlegel also noted in his presentation that CHF appreciation in real effective terms has been significantly less pronounced than in nominal effective terms (Fig. 1). From this perspective, we expect any SNB intervention to be measured rather than aggressive — aimed at easing appreciation pressures to limit disinflationary effects from the currency, rather than attempting to reverse the broader trend.

Notably, the SNB revised its inflation forecast higher at its March meeting relative to its December projection, yet the CPI outlook for 2026 remains at just 0.5% y-o-y, meaning significant disinflationary pressures are unwelcome (Fig. 2). Despite this, President Schlegel remains reluctant to return the policy rate to negative territory, emphasizing that inflation is stabilizing.

Given our views above, this reinforces our view that CHF depreciation driven by SNB FX intervention may occur on an occasional basis, but the policy rate will not serve as an influential factor to weaken the currency. Therefore, we believe capital flows such as the strong current account surplus, seasonal capital flows and safe-haven flows will continue to strongly support CHF into the end of the quarter.

Meanwhile, the Japanese currency authorities also remain vigilant on currency moves. On 19 May, Finance Minister Katayama conducted verbal intervention using the strongly worded phrase "bold action" that Japan could take when needed to counter disorderly market moves (source: Bloomberg). However, for the market to take the risk of actual intervention more seriously, what likely matters is whether verbal intervention escalates further through more frequent jawboning — not just from the Finance Minister, but also from Mimura, the Vice Minister of Finance for International Affairs at the MOF (i.e., the key person in charge of the MOF's intervention decisions). However, we have not seen jawboning from him recently.

In our recent survey, a majority of respondents (67.2%) expect the MOF to conduct intervention again by the time USD/JPY reaches 162 (Fig. 3). In this environment, where the market remains cautious but not alarmed about decisive MOF action, and with both 1m and 3m implied volatility significantly subdued, we believe intervention risk has not materially risen (Fig. 4). However, should USD/JPY continue to grind higher and approach the market's key 162 level, we would revisit our trade as the probability of the MOF acting to strengthen the currency would have increased.

Valuation methodology - Fixed Income

Nomura's Fixed Income Strategists express views on the price of securities and financial markets by providing trade recommendations. These can be relative value recommendations, directional trade recommendations, asset allocation recommendations, or a mixture of all three.
The analysis which is embedded in a trade recommendation would include, but not be limited to:

- Fundamental analysis regarding whether a security's price deviates from its underlying macro- or micro-economic fundamentals.
- Quantitative analysis of price variations.
- Technical factors such as regulatory changes, changes to risk appetite in the market, unexpected rating actions, primary market activity and supply/ demand considerations.

The timeframe for a trade recommendation is variable. Tactical ideas have a short timeframe, typically less than three months. Strategic trade ideas have a longer timeframe of typically more than three months.

Certain securities are subject to fluctuations in exchange rates that could have an adverse effect on the value or price of, or income derived from, the investment.

With respect to Fixed Income Research: Recommendations fall into two categories: tactical, which typically last up to three months; or strategic, which typically last from 6-12 months. However, trade recommendations may be reviewed at any time as circumstances change. 'Stop loss' levels for trades are also provided; which, if hit, closes the trade recommendation automatically. Prices and yields shown in recommendations are taken at the time of submission for publication and are based on either indicative Bloomberg, LSEG or Nomura prices and yields at that time. The prices and yields shown are not necessarily those at which the trade recommendation can be implemented.

The securities described herein may not have been registered under the US Securities Act of 1933 (the '1933 Act'), and, in such case, may not be offered or sold in the US or to US persons unless they have been registered under the 1933 Act, or except in compliance with an exemption from the registration requirements of the 1933 Act. Unless governing law permits otherwise, any transaction should be executed via a Nomura entity in your home jurisdiction.
