- HyVISION System Wins 95 Billion-Won ESS Battery Pack Equipment Order in North America.- thelec.net South Korea's HyVISION System has secured a KRW 95 billion (~USD 69 million) order for ESS battery pack assembly equipment in North America, with the contract value increasing nearly fivefold as the customer expanded its U.S. production plans through 2028. The equipment is expected to support production of LG Energy Solution's grid-scale ESS products at a facility in Ohio, with three assembly lines planned. The deal strengthens HyVISION's position in the rapidly growing North American ESS supply chain and highlights rising investment in localized battery manufacturing infrastructure.
- Yujin Technology Expands Supply of Key Components for North American ESS Production Lines.- thelec.net South Korea's Yujin Technology is expanding shipments of precision notching presses and cutter sets for prismatic battery production lines used in North American ESS manufacturing. The company is supplying equipment to facilities in the U.S., Canada, and Poland, with cumulative first-half orders reaching about KRW 6.9 billion. The expansion strengthens Yujin's position in the global battery equipment supply chain, while its recurring business model for maintenance and consumable replacement supports long-term growth alongside rising ESS battery production demand.
- GM advances LMR battery cells as LFP plans fade.- electrive.com General Motors (GM) is reconsidering its EV battery roadmap and may prioritize lithium manganese-rich (LMR) batteries over LFP for future vehicles. GM says LMR chemistry could offer similar costs to LFP but around 33% higher energy density, making it more suitable for larger EVs such as pickups and SUVs. While GM's Tennessee plant will still begin producing LFP cells, those batteries are now expected to target stationary energy storage systems rather than EVs. GM and LG Energy Solution have been jointly developing LMR technology for years, aiming for commercialization around 2028, as automakers continue searching for lower-cost, high-performance battery chemistries.
- SK On Sole Battery Supplier for Hyundai Motor Group's U.S. Metaplant.- thelec.net SK On has been confirmed as the exclusive battery supplier for Hyundai Motor Group Metaplant America (HMGMA) in Georgia, providing all batteries for EVs and hybrid vehicles produced at the facility, including the Ioniq 5, Ioniq 9, and Sportage Hybrid. The batteries are supplied from SK On's Georgia plant using a non-China supply chain that complies with U.S. FEOC requirements. Rising sales of Hyundai and Kia EVs in the U.S. are expected to improve utilization at SK On's American battery operations, while the company further expands local production with new ESS and joint-venture capacity.
- Sebang Lithium Battery to Partner With LGES on North American ESS Supply Worth 1.8 Trillion Won.- thelec.net Sebang Lithium Battery will partner with LG Energy Solution (LGES) to manufacture battery modules for LGES's JF2 Link grid-scale ESS platform at a new facility in Ohio, targeting the fast-growing North American energy storage market. The project is expected to generate cumulative orders worth KRW 1.8 trillion (~USD 1.3 billion) by 2028, with first shipments scheduled for the fourth quarter of 2026. Supported by major investments from Sebang Group, the partnership strengthens LGES's local ESS supply chain and expands Sebang's presence beyond traditional automotive batteries into large-scale energy storage manufacturing.
- This Dodge Charger EV Prototype Packs An Experimental Semi-Solid-State Battery.- insideevs.com Stellantis has begun real-world testing of a semi-solid-state battery developed with U.S. startup Factorial Energy, using a Dodge Charger Daytona EV prototype. The battery features an energy density of 375 Wh/kg, significantly higher than conventional lithium-ion cells, and can reportedly charge from 15% to 90% in 18 minutes. The project aims to validate the technology's performance, safety, and durability under real driving conditions, while advancing Stellantis' broader strategy toward next-generation batteries with longer range, faster charging, and lower costs.

- Far East Battery Launches 5MWh Solar-Plus-Storage Project in Silicon Valley to Expand North American AIDC ESS Ecosystem.-solarbe.com Far East Battery has begun installation of a 5MWh solar-plus-storage project in Silicon Valley, marking another milestone in its North American expansion following previous commercial ESS deployments in Southern California. The project includes an 860kVA PCS and 5MWh containerized storage system, designed to meet U.S. UL and IEEE standards for grid and safety compliance. Targeting the rapidly growing AI data center (AIDC) energy storage market, the system will provide services including peak shaving, demand management, and backup power, helping customers optimize energy costs and improve renewable energy utilization. The project strengthens Far East Battery's strategy to deepen its presence in the global ESS market across North America, Europe, and the Middle East.
- 2026 FIFA World Cup Signals the Rise of "Event-Grade ESS 2.0".-solarbe.com The 2026 FIFA World Cup is emerging as a showcase for a new era of "Event-Grade ESS 2.0", where battery energy storage evolves from a simple backup power source into an intelligent microgrid hub supporting zero-carbon stadium operations. With most host venues across the U.S., Canada, and Mexico integrating solar power systems, energy storage has become essential for shifting daytime renewable energy into nighttime match operations, powering lighting, broadcasting, cooling, and digital systems. The next generation of stadium ESS requires high safety, high reliability, and AI-driven energy management, while also creating long-term value through virtual power plants (VPPs), EV charging, grid services, and emergency backup applications after the tournament, highlighting how large sporting events are accelerating the commercialization of advanced clean energy infrastructure.
- DARPA Launches Next-Generation Military Battery Program Targeting 10x Energy Density.-thedefensepost.com The U.S. Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) has launched a new program to develop next-generation rechargeable military batteries capable of delivering 5–10 times higher energy density than current technologies. The initiative will focus on advancing battery chemistry, materials, and cell architecture to support future battlefield systems requiring significantly greater endurance and power output, highlighting growing strategic interest in advanced energy storage technologies for defense applications.

Asia

- China to Require Heavy Truck Charging Stations on Highways to Boost EV Truck Use, Cut Emissions.- yicaiglobal China has introduced a national plan requiring charging and battery swapping infrastructure for electric heavy-duty trucks to be integrated into highway development projects, aiming to accelerate freight transport decarbonization. By 2030, the country plans to build 3,000 heavy-truck charging and swapping stations across a 30,000-km zero-carbon freight corridor, while expanding grid infrastructure and green fuel networks. The policy targets raising new energy heavy-truck penetration to 40% and reflects growing efforts to support large-scale electrification of commercial transport through coordinated energy and transportation infrastructure development.
- Eve Energy Soars After Chinese Battery Giant Says First-Half Profit to More Than Double.- yicaiglobal Chinese battery maker EVE Energy saw its shares surge after forecasting that first-half net profit will more than double year-over-year to about CNY 3.4 billion (USD 500 million), supported by strong growth in both EV and energy storage battery demand. The company also expects revenue to rise around 60%, driven by expanding battery installations, rising exports, and improved supply-chain management. EVE Energy continues to gain market share in China's battery industry as demand for ESS and electric vehicles remains strong.
- China's Lithium Carbonate Futures Snap One-Month Drop to Rise on Energy Storage, AI Demand.- yicaiglobal China's lithium carbonate futures rebounded sharply after nearly a month of declines, supported by strong demand growth from energy storage systems (ESS), electric vehicles (EVs), and AI data center infrastructure. Analysts say the lithium market is shifting from being driven mainly by EVs to a broader demand base that includes ESS and AI computing power, improving long-term supply-demand dynamics. Rising energy storage deployment and AI-related electricity demand are also expected to increase demand for high-performance lithium batteries and battery materials, supporting a recovery across the lithium battery supply chain.
- CATL tempers near-term expectations for solid-state Batteries.- electrive.com CATL said large-scale commercialization of solid-state batteries is still unlikely before 2030, citing unresolved manufacturing and cost challenges. CEO Robin Zeng noted that early solid-state batteries will likely appear first in premium EVs, while the company continues laboratory validation and prototype development of its sulfide-based solid-state technology. Although CATL aims to begin limited production around 2027, the company emphasized that current solid-state cells remain significantly more expensive than conventional lithium-ion batteries, highlighting the long development path for next-generation battery technologies.
- Huawei HIMA brings in battery suppliers beyond CATL in cost-cutting push.- cnevpost.com Huawei's HIMA (Harmony Intelligent Mobility Alliance) is expanding its battery supplier network beyond CATL, adding companies including Gotion High-Tech, CALB, and Sunwoda to support lower-cost EV production. The move aims to reduce battery costs as HIMA pushes deeper into the mass-market EV segment, with smaller battery makers reportedly offering prices about 10% lower than CATL. The strategy reflects intensifying competition in China's EV market and growing efforts by automakers to diversify supply chains while balancing cost, scale, and performance requirements.
