China beer total sell-out value was +2% in May 2026, reflecting a small step up from April's 1% growth. Restaurant channel value growth continued in line with April at +3%, while off-trade value growth improved to +1% from -1% in April. Yanjing (not covered) was again the strongest performer in May with value +17% YoY (slowing down somewhat from April's +19%), followed by Chongqing (not covered) at +9% and CRBeer +3%, while Tsingtao value was -2%, and Bud China again underperforming the industry with a -3% decline.

Our regressions now indicate that CRBeer's topline growth will accelerate to c. 2% in Q2, Bud China's decline will narrow to c. -2%, and Tsingtao's will widen to c. -3% based on the Q2 to date monthly sales. We have observed a 96% correlation between Bud's reported growth over the last 15 months, compared to 84% for Yanjing, 81% for Tsingtao and Chongqing at 73%. CRBeer's correlation is low given they only report semi-annually.

Total off-trade beer sales improved MoM in all five key provinces, led by Zhejiang and Jiangsu which improved to +11%/+5%, from -7%/-11%, and Guangdong's off-trade growth continued to accelerate to +14% YoY vs +10% in April. All segments, other than MS+, bounced back to growth in the off-trade. In the restaurant channel, Guangdong again outperformed at +20% but we still haven't seen this filter through to Bud China. Shandong led the decline at -20%, dragging Tsingtao down. Premium segment value was up 8%, while Super Premium and M/S&Econ both declined in May.

CRBeer's April value growth came in at +3% in May, ahead of April's +2% but below Q1's +4% average yoy. CRBeer outperformed the Premium segment (+11% vs overall segment +5%) in May, driven by Heineken at +37%, with 11% value growth in both channels and both accelerating vs April. Overall, CRB grew value in both channels in May and the most pronounced growth was recorded in Guangdong and Fujian provinces where both channels registered double-digit growths in both channels (Exhibit 21).

Bud China's value was -3% again in May, similar to April and up from -8% in Q1 and -11% in Q4. Both channels showed modest trajectory improvement, but the lack of material uptick in the off-trade (-10% in May vs -12% in March & April) suggests that Bud's route to market expansion strategy is yet to deliver the goods. Bud improved in both channels in Zhejiang and also in Premium (Exhibit 19), but performance in the Guangdong restaurant channel slowed down and was materially behind overall channel performance.

Tsingtao's May value was -2% YoY, in line with Q1's -2% but marginally below March's 0% and April's -1%. Its home province Shandong (36% of Tsingtao's national sell-out value) was the biggest drag in the month with provincial value in restaurant channel performing much worse than March and April (Exhibit 25).

Chongqing (not covered) overall value was +9% YoY in May, in line with +9% in the 1st Quarter but slowing down from April's +12%, as the restaurant channel delivered significant sequential improvement in key provinces apart from Guangdong, but off-trade channel deteriorated in the month.

MONTHLY OVERVIEW

Our BigOne Lab China beer data set leverages the POS sell-out data to track 180k supermarket stores and menu QR code data for 230k restaurant outlets nationally, allowing us to track brewer sell-out value performance by province and price segment on a monthly basis. The data set does not cover the nightlife channel, however.

In May 2026 we saw 3-month rolling overall national beer value growth (i.e Off-Trade + Restaurant channel) +2% in the period ending May 31 (Exhibit 3). Comparing May vs April and March, May standalone value was +1% YoY, slightly better than March's -1% and April's +1%. Monthly value growth performance improved for CRBeer, Bud was at similar rate vs April, and all others saw deterioration in the month. By brewer, Yanjing (not covered) was again the strongest performer in May with value +17% YoY (slowing down somewhat from April's +19%), followed by Chongqing at +9% and CRBeer +3%, while Tsingtao value was -2%, and Bud China again underperforming the industry with a -3% decline in the month.

Going into June, comps are similar versus May (Exhibit 14), before they become much tougher in July for most brewers apart from Bud China and Yanjing.

OFF-TRADE / RESTAURANT CHANNEL MOMENTUM BY BREWER

BUD CHINA

Guangdong and Zhejiang were the largest contributors to Bud China's growth in the Restaurant channel (Exhibit 17). And similarly is Premium segment in the same channel (Exhibit 18), while in the off-trade Mainstream+ delivered marginal decline in the month.

Comparing May vs April, Bud's performance in the off-trade channel improved slightly on a national basis, and particularly in ZJ&JS, and also in the M/S&Econ segment. In the restaurant channel, we saw relatively better performance in ZJ&HeN and the Premium segment (Exhibit 19).
