High-quality Development More Sustainable for the Financial System in China

Despite some divergence among major economic data and volatility in recent months, we believe a high-quality development approach without significant stimulus better supports a more sustainable financial system in China.

More evidence of an earlier-than-expected positive loop for China Financials:

- Strong export growth supported by tech and industrial upgrades, offsetting risks from prior stimulus;
- Gradually easing PPI pressure with improving industrial profitability;
- Strong growth in household financial assets, alongside a recovery in consumption payment;
- Moderating TSF growth amid support from government bonds and more rational loan growth.

We expect an earlier-than-expected NIM rebound, more reasonable balance sheet growth, healthy fee income growth, and lower credit cost assumptions over the coming years for China's banks. This should support revenue and earnings growth, as well as steady performance among China's banks.

Solid Export Growth Aided by Tech and Industrial Upgrades

- Nominal GDP growth improved notably in 1Q26 to 4.9% YoY, supported by strong export growth and PPI returning to positive levels.
- Despite some volatility in March, YTD export growth remained strong at 14.5% YoY in April, which supported production recovery.

Industrial: Still Healthy Profit Growth and Reduction of Overcapacity Risks Despite Slower Headline Macro Numbers

- April YTD manufacturing FAI growth dropped to 1.2% from 4.1% YoY in March from a high base last year.
- YTD manufacturing profit growth accelerated further to 20.4% YoY in April 2026.
- Overall gross margin improved 6bps YoY, helped by both PPI rebound and cost control.

Manufacturing FAI and IP gap declined to -7.6%, from -2.8% in April, with lower FAI growth

Moderating TSF, Enough to Support Business Activities Rebound

- TSF growth continued to moderate in April, to 7.8% YoY, of which Rmb loan growth further slowed to 5.6% YoY.
- Government bonds were still the main support, up 15.6% YoY.
- Rmb loans declined Rmb401bn in April 2026 (vs. an Rmb88bn increase last year), suggesting more rational loan growth besides seasonality after quarter-end.

Total TSF (ex government bonds) has slowed to below 6% in April 2026, vs >9% even in 2021

RMB loan growth further moderated to 5.6% YoY in April 2026

Household Financial Assets Growth Remained Solid

- Household financial assets grew >12% YoY in 2024 and 2025 and remained high at 10.8% YoY in 1Q26.
- Retail credit growth has trended below GDP growth, with moderating household leverage. Overall retail credit growth was <2% per year from 2022 to 2024, and it declined in 2025, even though income growth stayed positive in 2024, at 4-5%.

No More Quantitative Target for Inclusive SME Loans

- The 2026 NFAR Notice on inclusive financing removed the quantitative growth target as well as the push for reducing comprehensive financing cost for SMEs. It put more emphasis on a fair competitive environment, as well as a stratified and differentiated SME loan market.
- We view it as another milestone policy change that removes one of the last non-market-oriented policy guidance. Since its inception in 2021, we have viewed the strict policy guidance on inclusive SME loans on both volume growth and pricing as one of the most non-market-oriented policies, which not only contributed to the last leg of the property bubble in 2021, but also led to distortion in credit allocation.

We Recently Raised Our Earnings Estimates for China's Major Banks

- We expect NIM to stabilize in 2026 and rebound in 2027, following the better-than-expected 1Q26 trend.
- We expect continued recovery in fee income growth and reduced pressure on investment income in 2026 through 2028.
- We expect a relatively stable asset quality amid more notable progress made on industrial risk digestion, despite persistent retail risks.

We raise our NPAT growth forecast for major banks (2026 and 2027) to factor in quicker NIM rebound and lower-than-expected credit risk with some mix adjustments for mid-sized banks

Investment Ideas

- Bank of Ningbo remains our Top Pick, delivering double-digit loan and profit growth, supported by market share gains, more rational competition, and strong product and service capabilities.
- Among SOE banks, we prefer BOC-H and CCB-H, given stable profit growth, still-attractive dividend yield (5.3%-5.4% for 2026E) and lower uncertainty in dilution from potential capital injection.
- We also favor Industrial Bank and CITIC Bank-H, given attractive dividends, healthy profit growth, and moderation in national team selling.
- We continue to expect Minsheng to perform well over the medium term, supported by an improving core client franchise and a low valuation.
