

Commodity Market Positioning & Flows

Weaker energy prices meet gold-led net outflows

- The estimated value of open interest across tracked commodity markets decreased by 4% WoW ($69 billion) to $1.82 trillion as of May 29 (Table 2, Figure 2). The decline was primarily driven by lower energy prices (ex. US natural gas) and $22 billion of outflows from gold markets across all trader types. Higher energy prices are now finding their way into the headline inflation forecasts by our economists, however global (ex. China) core inflation is still expected to remain “sticky” at around 3%. This potentially increases pressure on the Fed to tighten, but expectations for a mix of easing and stability elsewhere have shifted to a projection for a broad but shallow global tightening cycle over the coming year (Global Data Watch: Tenor madness, Kasman et al, 29 May 2026).
- The estimated value of net investor positioning aggregated across global commodity futures markets decreased by 8% WoW ($20 billion WoW) to $223 billion as of the latest data available (Table 1, Figure 3, Figure 4). The decline was largely driven by the energy and agri markets. Net length in energy markets declined by $9 billion WoW, primarily driven by the decline across crude oil, where net length decreased from $61 billion to $51 billion over the week, followed by a $1.4 billion net shortening in TTF natural gas. Net length in agri markets declined by $6.5 billion WoW, driven by a decline across corn, soybean and livestock markets. Net length in precious metals decreased by $3.5 billion WoW, led by gold (-$2.7 billion WoW), while net length in base metals decreased by $1.5 billion WoW, driven by copper and aluminum. JPM QDS’s latest projections, as of June 1, indicate that positioning across commodity markets is expected to decline by a further $2.6 billion, largely driven by energy markets.
- The estimated value of open interest in energy markets decreased by 6% WoW ($56 billion WoW) to $816 billion (29 May, Figure 6). This was driven by a decline in prices across the crude oil and petroleum products markets over the week (Brent down 11% WoW, WTI down 10%, ICE Gasoil down 11%), in addition to net contract-based outflows of $14 billion, primarily from the crude oil markets. We estimate a 9% decline in China’s oil demand, with limited decline in underlying economic activity—with a portion of the loss in gasoline, diesel, and fuel oil demand likely to persist, as jet fuel and naphta will largely recover. The estimated value of open interest in natural gas markets decreased by 3% over the week to $175 billion (29 May, Figure 13). This was driven by a decline in prices across European and Asian benchmarks and net contract-based outflows of $3 billion, partially offset by an increase in the US natural gas prices over the week. We estimate that the global LNG market has absorbed about 60% of the Hormuz-driven supply shock through increased output from new projects in North America and Africa, keeping spot prices relatively stable. However, with market flexibility now fading and European storage levels well below average, we expect prices to rise into peak injection season to accelerate gas-to-coal switching in Europe and soften Asian spot LNG demand, ultimately supporting Europe’s storage trajectory.
- The estimated value of open interest in precious metals markets declined by 8%

WoW ($22 billion) to $264 billion, falling for the third straight week (29 May, Figure 8). Across all trader types, the sector saw strong net contract-based outflows totalling $22 billion WoW, primarily from gold ($22 billion WoW). Meanwhile, net Managed Money positioning in COMEX Gold futures increased by 3.9k contracts to a total of 97.4k contracts net long. Global gold ETF holdings now sit at 4,131 tonnes (+3% YTD), despite another wave of selling in April and May.

- The estimated value of open interest in base metals markets increased by 1% WoW ($1.8 billion) to $239 billion (29 May, Figure 9). The sector saw net contract-based inflows across all trader types, as the outflows from aluminium (-$0.9 billion WoW) and zinc (-$0.3 billion) markets have been more than offset by inflows in copper (+$2.3 billion WoW). Supply disappointments and disruptions have swelled once again in 2026, supporting a higher-for-longer zinc price environment despite still-lifeless demand. LME zinc prices are expected to remain in a higher for longer range of $3,400–$3,500/mt on average over the balance of 2026 to incentivize Chinese exports, though risks are skewed towards a quicker cooling over 2H26 as Chinese exports could overshoot while inflationary pressures risk curbing demand more sharply than our forecast.
- The estimated value of open interest across environmental markets increased by 7% WoW ($5 billion) to $76 billion WoW (29 May, Figure 7). This was driven by a 5% increase in the EUA prices, further supported by net contract-based inflows of $1 billion, primarily into the EUA market. Investment Funds increased their net long position across EUAs as of 22 May to 38,981 lots, up by 422 lots WoW.
- The estimated value of open interest in agricultural markets remained largely stable over the week at $393 billion (29 May, Figure 10, Figure 14), as net contract-based inflows of $4 billion, primarily into the soybean markets, were broadly offset by a decline in prices across corn, wheat, sugar and cotton markets.
- Price momentum largely decreased across most of the complex over the week (29 May, Figure 17, Figure 18). The short-term price momentum trading signals on Gasoil, TTF, Soybeans and Sugar switched negative to a ‘sell’ signal during the week.

Open interest is calculated as the number of outstanding contracts (OI) multiplied by contract size and latest price. Weekly flow is calculated as the weekly change in outstanding contracts (OI) multiplied by contract size and previous week's price.

Price momentum and trading signals

*see methodology in Figure 18

Source: Bloomberg Finance L.P., J.P. Morgan Commodities Research, as of May 29, 2026

When the z-score (indicator of momentum) reaches 0, known as the switch point, it often triggers a change in signal from buy-to-sell, or sell-to-buy received by stochastic price/trend following trading models. This can drive heightened price volatility in the underlying commodity price when there is a large presence of CTA/trend-following trading models. When momentum reaches extreme levels, either maximum positive or maximum negative, a neutral signal is often sent, to stop or slow buying or selling. This often drives profit taking or an exit of positions.

Framework developed by J.P. Morgan Global Markets Strategy (Flows & Liquidity, Panigirtzoglou, Inkinen et al, 27 May 2026)

Optimal lookback period of each momentum strategy combined with a mean reversion indicator that turns signal neutral when momentum z-score exceeds the extreme momentum threshold, and a filter that turns neutral when the z-score is low (below 0.05 and above -0.05) to avoid excessive trading. Lookbacks, current signals and z-scores are shown for shorter-term and longer-term momentum separately, along with performance of a combined signal. Annualized return, volatility and information ratio of the signal; current signal; and z-score of the current return over the relevant lookback period; data from 1999 onward.

| Market          | Lookback duration | Lookback sessions | z-score 29/05/26 | Extreme threshold | Current signal | z-score 22/05/26 | Sessions since last signal switch | Information ratio | % change of return index from its MA |
