Swiss Watches: Secondary Market Keeps Ticking Higher in 2Q26

Key Takeaways

- In 2Q26, all three listed groups – Richemont, Swatch Group and LVMH – recorded a sequential uptick in secondhand prices.
- Gains were stronger than in 1Q for LVMH and broadly stable for Richemont/ Swatch Group, with LVMH leading at +1.7%, followed by Richemont at +1.3% and Swatch Group at +1.0%.
- Among the listed players, the standout performers by brand QoQ include TAG Heuer (+3.8%) from LVMH, Cartier (+2.2%) and Vacheron Constantin (+1.4%) from Richemont, as well as Omega (+0.9%) from Swatch Group.
- Importantly, the value retention ratio (a barometer of desirability) continued to improve sequentially for most leading brands owned by listed groups, despite retail price increases.
- All in all, while most secondhand market metrics improved again in 2Q and the recovery became more broad-based, gains for the listed players remain relatively modest, and VR ratios continue to suggest limited pricing power outside the Big Three in the coming quarters.

Tracking the price evolution of secondhand watches is interesting for equity investors, as, in general, it provides a good barometer of a brand's desirability and thus future pricing power/growth trajectory.

Overall, secondary watch market fundamentals continued to improve in 2Q26, although the pace of recovery moderated. (1) Secondary prices rose by +1.5% QoQ in 2Q26, marking a fourth consecutive quarter of gains above +1% – see Exhibit 1. The recovery is becoming increasingly broad-based, with 27 of the 35 brands we track posting positive QoQ performance in 2Q26, up from 25 in 1Q26. (2) Encouragingly, value retention also continued to slowly but gradually improve for most tracked brands, despite retail price increases. Value Retention is defined as the premium/discount that an in-production watch trades for on the secondary market relative to its retail price. Seven of the eight brands we track posted sequential improvement on a like-for-like basis. This indicates that secondary demand overall remains reasonably healthy and increasingly organic, even as near-term dynamics were distorted by Watches & Wonders anticipation, which drove a surge in listings and strong April performance before prices softened in May and June. All in all, these trends indicated a strengthening of leading brands' desirability for the three listed groups (Richemont, Swatch Group and LVMH). However we caveat that, outside the Big Three, all tracked brands continue to trade at discounts of at least -27% to retail, which should limit pricing power despite improving market momentum.

What's new? We break down the latest trends in the secondary watch market in 2Q26 in this note, using data from the secondary watch market research platform WatchCharts.

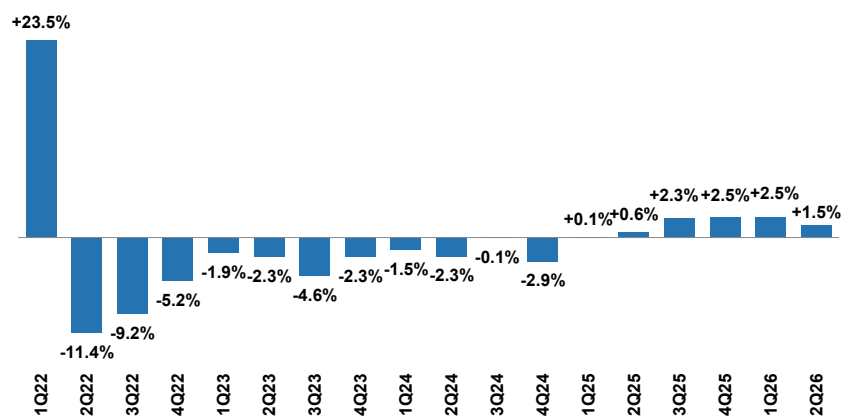

What the data says:

Secondary prices rose +1.5% in 2Q26, a fourth consecutive quarter of gains exceeding +1%. While the pace of growth moderated compared to previous quarters (+2.5% in both 4Q25 and 1Q26), gains were the most widespread of the recovery so far: 27 of the 35 brands we track posted positive QoQ performance (compared to 25 in 1Q26). Within the Big Three, Patek Philippe gained +2.2%, Audemars Piguet gained +1.5%, and Rolex gained +1.0%.

Performance of all leading Groups improved QoQ, led by LVMH (+1.7%). LVMH's performance was driven by TAG Heuer (+3.8%). However, LVMH lacks a consistent performer with significant secondary market share (such as Omega for Swatch Group and Cartier for Richemont); as a result, its long-term performance lags notably behind the other Swiss groups (see Exhibit 7). For Richemont (+1.3%), Cartier (+2.2%) remains the standout performer, while Vacheron Constantin (+1.4%) posted a third consecutive quarter of recovery. Richemont reported its sales for the three months to June this week (see note here): triangulating data points, we estimate that Cartier Watches grew in excess of 20% YoY at constant FX, still far outperforming the rest of the Swiss watch industry (as per Swiss watch exports). Interestingly, the Specialty Watchmakers division also positively surprised (constant FX sales up +8% YoY). Richemont does not disclose its sales by brand, but we estimate that Vacheron, Lange and Jaeger all grew double digit YoY (we think it is particularly encouraging for Jaeger, which had been struggling in recent years). On the secondary market, WatchCharts data shows that Jaeger-LeCoultre saw positive price momentum, rising +1.2% QoQ. As for the Rolex Group (+1.1%) gains essentially track Rolex, though Tudor (+2.6%) prices also rose. Similarly, Swatch Group's (+1.0%) performance is largely reflective of Omega (+0.9%) – though the Swatch brand was the top performer in the quarter (+9.4%). On a YoY basis, all four groups are trending positive for the first time since early 2022 (as per Exhibit 2 below).

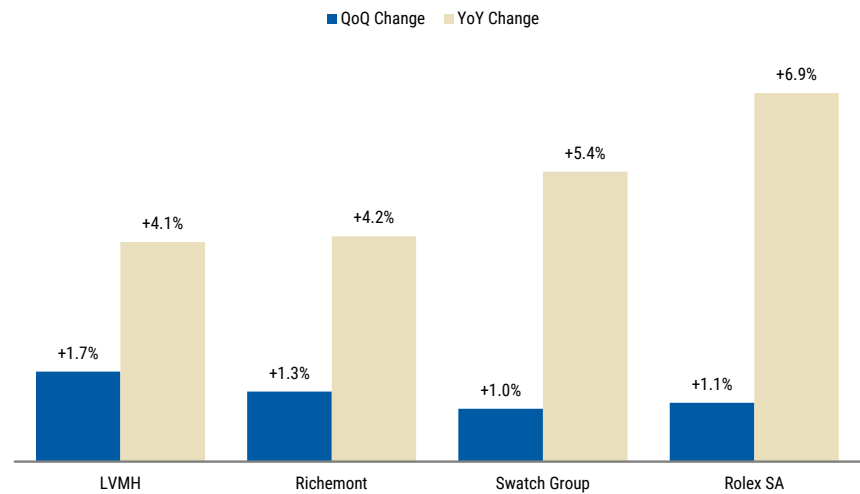

Value retention continued to improve for most brands, despite retail price increases. Seven out of the eight brands that we track saw a sequential improvement in VR on a LfL basis. All tracked brands saw secondary prices of in-production models rise QoQ, while at the same time retail price increases also affected five out of the eight brands – most notably Cartier, Rolex, and Patek Philippe. The Big Three (Rolex, PP and AP) continue to trade above retail, led by Patek Philippe (+15.4% VR), while all other brands trade for at least -27% below retail (and up to -38% for IWC).

What's new in 2Q26

We outline several of the key trends shaping the secondary watch market in 2Q26.

Secondary prices rose +1.5% in 2Q26, the fourth consecutive quarter of gains exceeding +1%. While the pace of growth moderated compared to previous quarters (+2.5% in both 4Q25 and 1Q26), gains were the most widespread of the recovery so far: 27 of the 35 brands we track posted positive QoQ performance (compared to 25 in 1Q26). Within the Big Three, Patek Philippe gained +2.2%, Audemars Piguet gained +1.5%, and Rolex gained +1.0%.

Performance of all Groups improved QoQ, led by LVMH (+1.7%).

- LVMH's performance was driven by TAG Heuer (+3.8%) and Zenith (+2.8%).
 - For Richemont (+1.3%), Cartier (+2.2%) remains the standout performer, while Vacheron Constantin (+1.4%) posted a third consecutive quarter of recovery.
 - Rolex SA (+1.1%) gains essentially track Rolex, though Tudor prices also rose (+2.6%).
 - Similarly, Swatch Group's (+1.0%) performance is largely reflective of Omega (+0.9%) – though the Swatch brand was the top performer in the quarter (+9.4%).
- On a YoY basis, all four groups are trending positive for the first time since early 2022.

Value retention continued to improve for most brands, despite retail price increases.

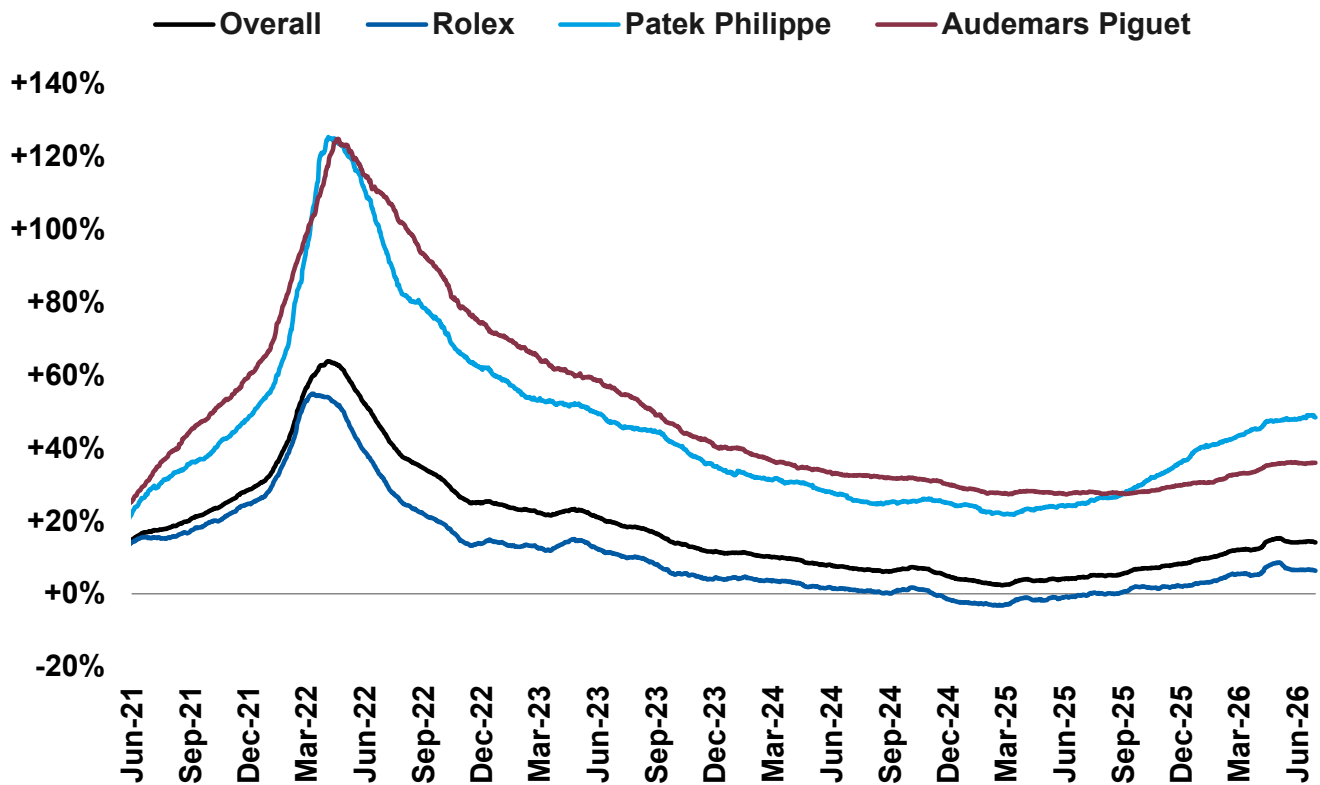

Seven out of the eight brands that we track saw a sequential improvement in VR on a LfL basis. All tracked brands saw secondary prices of in-production models rise QoQ, while at the same time retail price increases also affected five out of the eight brands – most notably Cartier, Rolex, and Patek Philippe. The Big Three continue to trade above retail, led by Patek Philippe (+15.4% VR), while all other brands trade for at least -27% below retail.

Market health dynamics were defined by rising supply and Watches & Wonders anticipation. Supply levels reached record or near-record highs for all tracked brands over the past two quarters, driven primarily by an influx of new listings in March and April. We believe this influx was triggered by Watches & Wonders (which saw record-high interest this year) as dealers sought to capitalize on anticipation for the event. While demand remained steady, the surplus of new listings caused prices to stagnate in May and June, dampening momentum from a historically strong April (the best single calendar month of performance since the market downturn began in 2022, according to the WatchCharts Overall Market price tracker). Looking forward, we believe the events of 1H26 will have limited carryover into the third quarter, though the excess supply accumulated (particularly for Rolex) will still need to be absorbed.

Rolex CPO posted record sales of $186 million in 2Q26. Sales rose +28% QoQ and +67% YoY, with 1H26 sales of $330 million already representing about two-thirds of the program's FY25 total. Available inventory stands at approximately 11,300 watches valued at $285 million, with three key retailers (Bucherer, Watches of Switzerland, The 1916 Company) continuing to hold roughly half of total supply across 157 RCPO retailers globally. We also observed a significant increase in median per-retailer sales, from $578K in 1H25 to $899K in 1H26.

Unless otherwise stated, the analysis of the overall watch market in this report is based on the WatchCharts Overall Market price tracker, which aggregates the secondary market performance of 300 watches from 10 major brands, weighted by annual transaction value in USD. Brand or collection performance is analyzed using its respective WatchCharts price tracker, derived from the top 30 watches within the brand or collection. Group performance is based on the top 30 watches for each brand within the group, all weighted by annual transaction value in USD. WatchCharts data can be subsequently revised or adjusted. The most recent publications prevail.

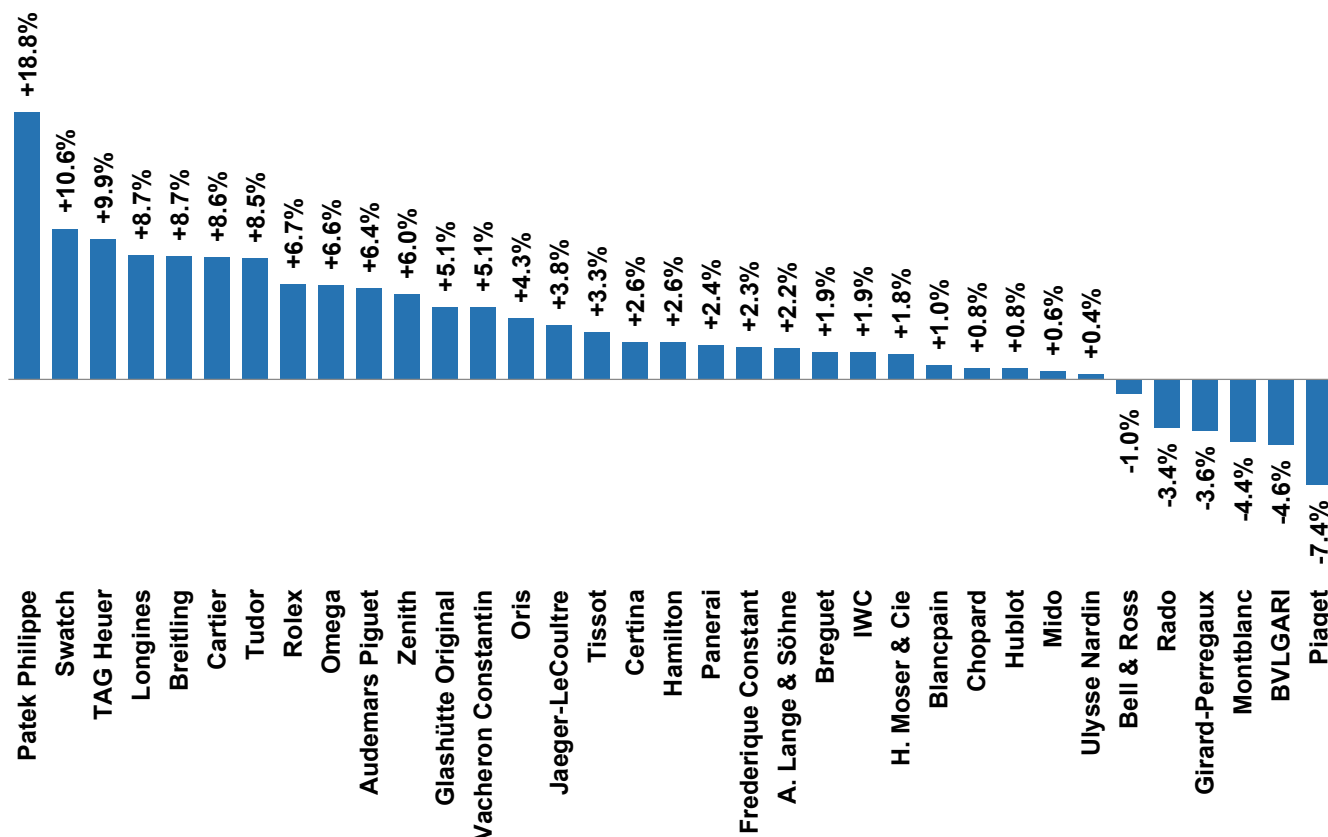

Secondary prices see broad-based gains for fourth consecutive quarter in 2Q26

The WatchCharts Overall Market price tracker rose +1.5% in 2Q26, marking the fourth consecutive quarter of gains exceeding +1%. More brands continued to see prices rise than fall, with 27 out of 35 tracked brands being up QoQ and 29 up YoY. However, the vast majority of 2Q26 growth can be attributed to April's performance specifically, primarily driven by anticipation for Watches & Wonders. Specifically, the WatchCharts Overall Market price tracker rose +2.5% in April (the single best month since March 2022), yet fell by -1.0% across May and June. As a result, the pace of growth was in line with previous quarters (+2.3% in 3Q25, +2.5% in 4Q25, +2.5% in 1Q26).

Rolex (+1.0% QoQ): despite sports hype, classic models led the rise. While the GMT-Master collection and specifically the “Pepsi” reference 126710BLRO were in the spotlight, they were not among the brand’s best performers. The GMT-Master collection was up just +0.3% QoQ, and Pepsi prices actually fell by -2.3% QoQ as buyers had front-run the widely anticipated discontinuation. Instead, Rolex’s QoQ gains can primarily be attributed to its dressier models, with Air-King (+2.1%), Datejust (+1.7%), and Sky-Dweller (+1.6%) collections all outperforming. Meanwhile, the Sea-Dweller collection continued to fall, down -2.0% QoQ.

Patek Philippe (+2.2% QoQ) and Audemars Piguet (+1.5% QoQ) both continued to rise in 2Q, though momentum similarly faded in May and June, mirroring Rolex. For Patek, prices of all collections continued to rise QoQ, led by Aquanaut (+3.6%), Gondolo (+2.2%), and Nautilus (+1.7%). Meanwhile for AP, the Royal Oak (+2.0%) was strong while CODE 11.59 (-0.5%) and Royal Oak Offshore (-1.5%) fell QoQ.

Among mid-level brands, TAG Heuer and Breitling emerged as top performers ... TAG Heuer (+3.8% QoQ, +9.9% YoY) and Breitling (+3.8% QoQ, +8.7% YoY) ranked among the top performers both QoQ and YoY.

- TAG Heuer’s recent gains have been concentrated in motorsports collections, most notably Formula 1 (+5.0% QoQ, +8.7% YoY) and Monaco (+2.2% QoQ, +8.0% YoY) – likely driven by increased interest as a result of the brand’s return to Formula 1 as its official timekeeper last year.

- Meanwhile, Breitling's gains were broad-based, led by the Superocean Heritage (+4.5%) and Chronomat (+4.4%). However, both brands generally lag behind mid-level leaders in terms of value retention; popular in-production TAG Heuer Formula 1 models trade more than -60% below retail, while popular in-production Breitling Navitimer, Endurance, and Chronomat models trade for around -40% to -50% below retail.

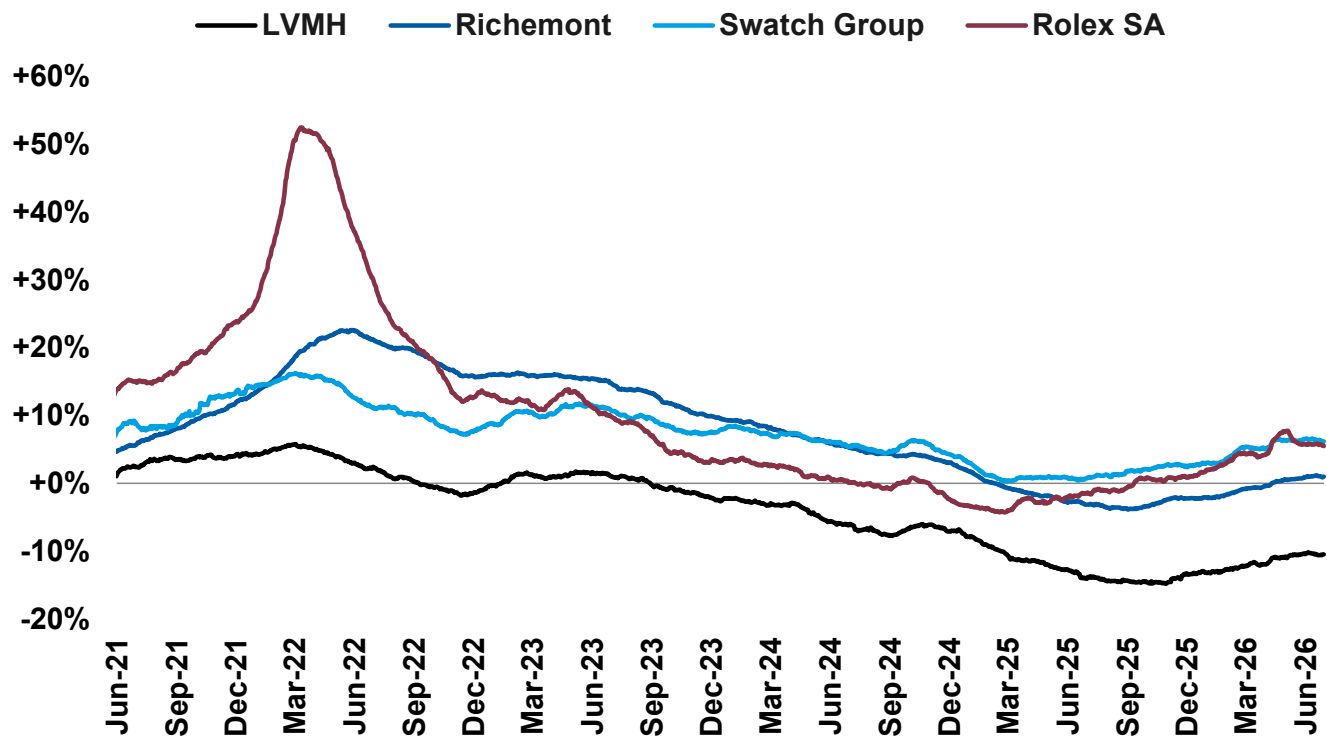

... while Tudor (+2.6%), Cartier (+2.2%) and Omega (+0.9%) saw continued growth.

For Cartier, all collections saw QoQ gains, with Panthère (+3.8%), Santos (+3.0%), and Tank (+2.9%) QoQ performance being particularly strong. Meanwhile, Tudor's performance continues to be driven by its dive watch collections, with the vintage Submariner collection up +3.2% QoQ and the modern Black Bay collection up +2.6% QoQ. Meanwhile, Omega's performance was led by the Speedmaster and De Ville collections, both up +1.4% QoQ.

All three listed groups were up +1% or more QoQ.

- LVMH led the listed groups at +1.7%, as a result of strong performance from TAG Heuer (+3.8%, discussed above) and Zenith (+2.8%). Hublot (-0.3%) remains the group's laggard, though prices have stabilized over the past year.
- For Richemont (+1.3%), Cartier (+2.2%) remains the standout, while Vacheron Constantin (+1.4%) also outperformed thanks to broad gains from its collections (in particular, the Overseas was up +1.6%).
- For Swatch Group (+1.0%), Omega (+0.9%), Breguet (+2.5%), and Glashütte Original (+1.7%) rose, while Mido (-1.3%) lagged. The Swatch brand jumped +9.4%. On a YoY basis, all four Swiss groups recorded positive performance for the first time since 2022.

Analysis of market health and fundamentals

We propose four key indicators for evaluating the health of the secondary watch market or one of its segments: total supply (the amount of inventory on the market), absorption rate (the rate at which the inventory is turning over), age of inventory (how old the available inventory is), and days on market (how fast sold inventory is selling). Our analysis in this section covers the Big Three (Rolex, Patek Philippe, and Audemars Piguet) and three key mid-level brands (Cartier, Omega, and IWC).

Secondary market dynamics in 2Q26 were driven by Watches & Wonders anticipation.

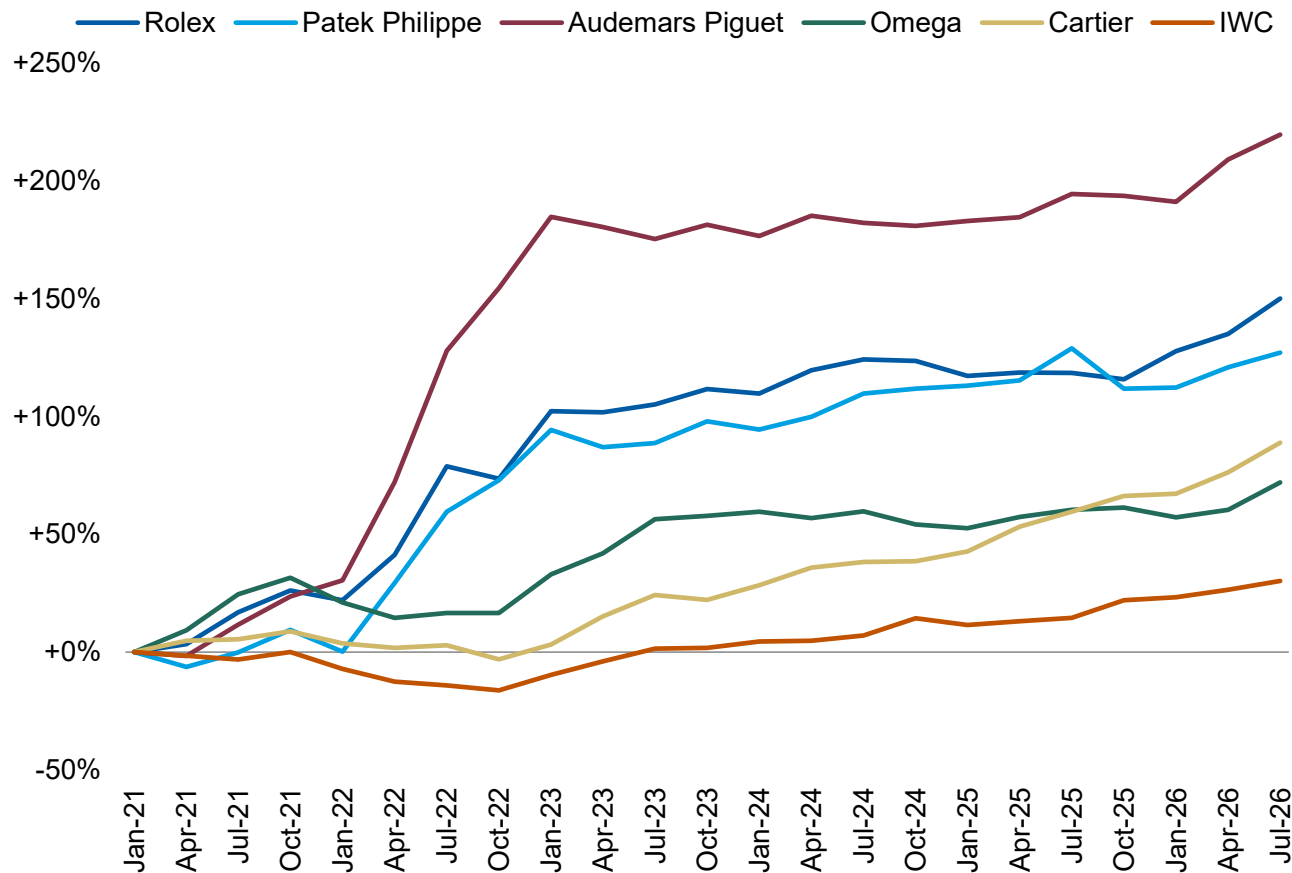

Excitement for Watches & Wonders 2026 (which took place on April 14-20) surpassed previous years by a wide margin, based on Google Trends data. This was driven by several key events, including the anticipated discontinuation of the Rolex GMT-Master “Pepsi” and the releases surrounding the 50th anniversary of the Patek Philippe Nautilus. For reasons we explain below, we believe that the market health and secondary pricing dynamics we observed in the past quarter can be explained by this unprecedented anticipation, as well as (in retrospect) many deferred purchases from 1Q26.

Analysis of value retention and market performance by brand

We think value retention (VR), defined as the premium/discount that an in-production watch trades for on the secondary market relative to its retail price, is a key metric to gauge brand desirability. Our value retention analysis methodology reflects a global average of five key markets: United States (USD), United Kingdom (GBP), Germany (EUR), Japan (JPY), and Hong Kong (HKD). See the Methodology section at the end of this report for a more in-depth explanation.

Value retention for most brands continued to improve sequentially. Seven out of the eight brands we tracked saw value retention improve on a like-for-like basis compared to 1Q26, with the sole exception being Cartier as a result of significant retail price increases. Secondary prices of in-production models also improved for all tracked brands, in line with the performance of their corresponding WatchCharts price trackers. Patek Philippe (+2.9pp) and IWC (+1.2pp) saw the largest improvements in LfL value retention, while Rolex, Audemars Piguet, and Omega improved by +1.0pp.

The Big Three continue to command secondary premiums; all other tracked brands trade at least -27% below retail. Patek Philippe continues to lead all brands by VR, with the gap between Patek and second-place Rolex widening as a result of the latter's product discontinuations (most notably the Pepsi). Audemars Piguet continues to maintain positive LSD value retention, supported by Royal Oak demand. 47 out of 126 Patek models (37%), 52 out of 139 Rolex models (37%), and 51 out of 87 AP models (59%) trade above retail, while only four tracked models outside the Big Three (two each from Omega and Vacheron) command secondary premiums. Patek Philippe is the only brand with multiple watches that trade for more than double retail, with a total of 12 from Aquanaut and Nautilus collections.

Retail price increases continue to be prevalent, with five out of eight tracked brands raising prices last quarter. Cartier, Vacheron Constantin, Rolex, and Tudor raised retail prices across all five regions we track, while Patek Philippe only raised prices in Japan. Cartier's retail price increases were by far the largest out of the tracked brands last quarter, which explains why it was the only tracked brand which saw a decline in VR on a LfL basis.

PATEK PHILIPPE

- Global VR: +15.4%
- VR range: +10.4% (GBP) to +23.9% (HKD)
- Retail price changes: JPY: +7.8%

In-production Patek Philippe models trade for an average of +15.4% above retail, compared to +12.5% in March 2026 (+2.9pp, +2.9pp LfL), based on our analysis of 126 models. Since our last report, Patek raised retail prices in Japan by +7.8% while leaving the other four tracked markets unchanged, for a global average retail price increase of +1.6%.

Market prices of in-production models rose by an average of +2.5% in 2Q26, led by the Nautilus (+5.0%) and Aquanaut (+3.6%) collections. VR dynamics for Patek remain largely in line with past reports. Sports collections continue to trade substantially above retail, while dress collections trade at average discounts in excess of -30% below retail.

ROLEX

- Global VR: +9.8%
- VR range: +2.8% (GBP) to +20.9% (JPY)
- Retail price changes: USD: +2.6%, EUR: +2.6%, GBP: +2.6%, HKD: +2.6%, JPY: +2.6%

In-production Rolex models trade for an average of +9.8% above retail, compared to +11.1% in March 2026 (-1.3pp, +1.0pp LfL), based on our analysis of 139 models. On June 1, Rolex raised retail prices by an average of +2.6% across all five tracked markets. Specifically, Rolex raised prices of its gold models by an average of +5.0% and two-tone models by an average of +2.5%, while the remainder of the catalog was unaffected.

The decrease in value retention on an all-models basis can be attributed to both the retail price increase this quarter and the discontinuation of the stainless steel GMT-Master II “Pepsi” reference 126710BLRO, which last had a value retention of around +85%. Its discontinuation also explains the gap in value retention evolution between the VR evolution and LfL VR evolution.

Rolex's secondary prices of in-production models rose by an average of +0.5% in 2Q26, with 7 of 14 collections trading above retail. The Land-Dweller – its latest collection – continues to lead in value retention, while Sea-Dweller continues to trail by a wide margin.

Update on Rolex Certified Pre-Owned Program

In December 2022, Rolex launched its Certified Pre-Owned (CPO) Program, the first large-scale CPO program by a luxury watch brand. By leveraging WatchCharts data, we track the global state of RCPO inventory and calculate a “CPO Premium” for each retailer which allows us to assess how disruptive the Rolex CPO program is to traditional secondhand watch trading platforms. The CPO Premium is an estimate for how much more expensive a watch is when listed by a Rolex CPO retailer compared to a traditional secondary dealer. See the Methodology section at the end of this report for an explanation of how the CPO premium is calculated.

Rolex CPO growth continues steadily, with 3 new retailers joining and record-high sales of $186 million in 2Q26. Sales rose +28% QoQ and +67% YoY, reaccelerating after a seasonal first-quarter dip that mirrored the pattern seen in 1Q25. Compared to sales of around $500 million in FY25, 1H26 sales of $330 million already represent two-thirds of last year's total. As of July 4th, 2026, we estimate that there are around 11,300 RCPO watches in inventory globally from 157 retailers, with a total value of $285 million.

Exhibit 29: Quarterly RCPO sales since 1Q23 (in $millions)

Source: WatchCharts, Morgan Stanley Research

For the first time in RCPO history, available inventory declined quarter-over-quarter. Listed inventory fell from roughly 11,600 watches at the end of 1Q26 to 11,300 at the end of 2Q26, the first sequential decline since the program's inception. The three largest retailers – Rolex (Bucherer and Tourneau | Bucherer), Watches of Switzerland, and The 1916 Company – continue to hold around half of total available inventory.

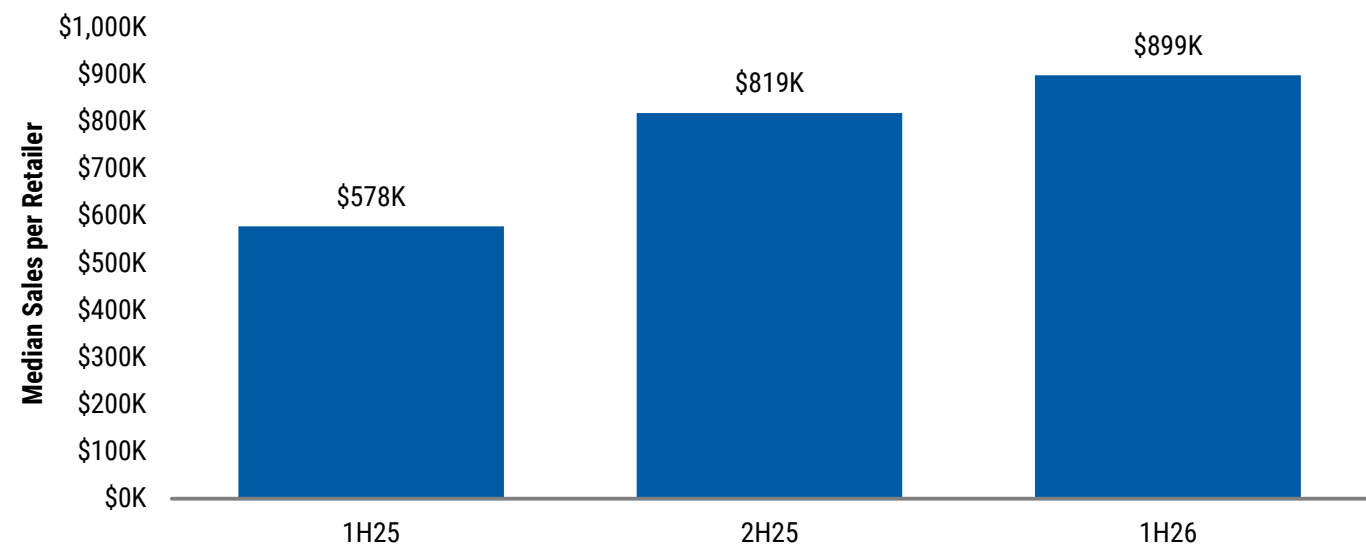

Exhibit 30: Evolution of total supply of RCPO inventory and number of RCPO retailers since the program's inception in December 2022

Source: WatchCharts, Morgan Stanley Research

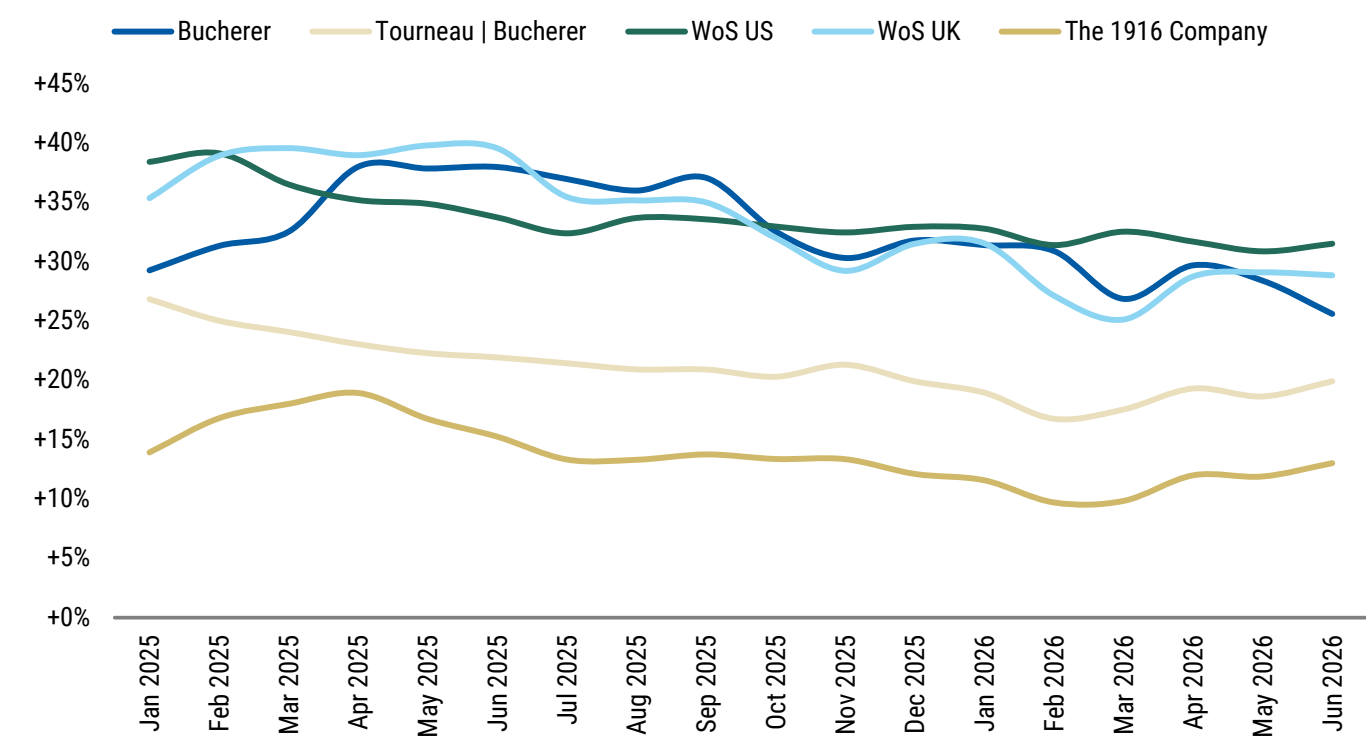

RCPO growth is increasingly driven by higher per-retailer sales, rather than program expansion. In 2024 and 2025, RCPO growth was largely driven by program expansion: the network grew from 26 retailers at the end of 2023 to 144 by the end of 2025. That expansion has since slowed – with 13 new retailers joining in 2026, including just three in the second quarter – yet sales sit comfortably at record levels. The gains are instead coming from within the existing network: the median RCPO retailer sold an estimated $899K of CPO watches in 1H26, up +56% from $578K in 1H25. Today, 157 of 712 Rolex retailers (22%) and 288 of 1,334 doors (22%) operate RCPO.

Methodology

Value Retention:

The list of current-production models for the brand based on data from their official website is identified, along with the retail prices of these watches in five major markets: United States (USD), United Kingdom (GBP), Germany (EUR), Hong Kong (HKD), and Japan (JPY). Watches for which a retail price is not obtainable are not considered for inclusion in the analysis. This list is then cross-referenced with WatchCharts' catalog of secondary market prices, filtering out any models that do not have sufficient secondary market data.

The value retention of each brand is calculated as a flat average of the brand's value retention in each of the five countries. For each country, the value retention is calculated as a weighted average of the value retention of each model, with annual sales volume used as the weighting factor. For each model, the value retention is calculated as the percentage difference between the retail price and the market price in that country, using the country's native currency.

For LfL analysis, common models between two different value retention data sets (two different points in time) are determined for each country, and the delta of the value retention between these common models represents the LfL VR evolution of that country. The global average LfL VR evolution is calculated as a flat average of the LfL VR evolution of each country, while the global average LfL count is calculated as a flat average of the LfL count of each country.

Rolex CPO Premium:

The Rolex CPO premium is the comparison of two values: the price of CPO inventory (which is known by indexing the retailer's website) and the price of comparable inventory sold by non-CPO dealers (which we need to estimate).

The CPO premium aims to represent the isolated effect of a watch being sold by a CPO retailer versus a non-CPO retailer. This is done by using WatchCharts data to approximate the expected price of each CPO watch if it were instead being sold (not as CPO) on the secondary market. We estimate this price based on a set of characteristics that are comparable to each actual watch being sold by the CPO retailer.

In calculating our estimated market price, we assume:

- The non-CPO watch is of the same model as the CPO retailer's watch (identified based on the reference number).
- The non-CPO watch is being sold by a reputable dealer within the same region as the CPO retailer.
- The non-CPO watch is in used condition, not new or new-old-stock.
- The non-CPO watch is offered with the original box and warranty card.

Using these assumptions, we calculate a market price for each watch in the CPO retailer's inventory and thus derive a percent delta between the standard secondary non-CPO market price and the CPO retailer's price. The median delta for all listings is used as the retailer's CPO premium. For any subset of data that is used in a breakdown, the median delta of the subset is used as the CPO premium.
