FTSE China Index Series Review and Flow Implications (June 2026)

What Happened? FTSE Russell announced the results of its quarterly index review for the FTSE China Index Series after the market closed on June 3 (Wednesday). All changes will take effect after market close on June 18 (Thursday).

Constituent Changes: For the FTSE China 50, Yangtze Optical Fibre & Cable (H) (6869), and Giga Device Semiconductor (H) (3986) will replace China Tower (H) (788), and CRRC (H) (1766). For the FTSE China A50, Suzhou Dongshan Precision (A) (002384), Giga Device Semiconductor (A) (603986), Victory Giant Technology (A) (300476), Montage Technology (A) (688008), and Weichai Power (A) (000338) will replace Ping An Bank (A) (000001), China State Construction Eng. (A) (601668), Shenzhen Mindray Bio-Medical Elec. (A) (300760), Haitian Flavouring & Food (A) (603288), and Haier Smart Home (A) (600690). Weight adjustments will be around 3.5% for China 50 and 7.1% for China A50. (Exhibit 3)

Index Implications: Following the rebalancing, FTSE China 50 index's forward 12-month P/E and EPS growth (2026-27 CAGR) are expected to remain unchanged (9.3x and 10.2%), while trailing dividend yield would shift from 3.3% to 3.2%. For China A50 index, the corresponding metrics would change from 12.7x to 13.5x (fP/E), 2.6% to 2.4% (D/Y), and 13.9% to 15.7% (EPS growth). (Exhibit 1)

Sector Implications: Tech Hardware & Semis (+US$550mn), Consumer Retail (+US$330mn), and Internet/Media (+US$140mn) are poised to see the largest passive inflows, while Insurance & Fins Services (-US$130mn) and Energy (-US$110mn) may face the biggest outflows. These changes reflect rebalancing for existing and pending constituents in FTSE China 50/A50, combined with potential flows from FTSE GEIS. Overall, we estimate that the FTSE rebalancing could generate around US$3.0bn in gross two-way passive flows for China. (Exhibit 2)

Historical vs. Current Patterns: For the FTSE China 50, current additions have significantly outperformed relative to historical patterns, and post-announcement performance has tended to be volatile and mildly negative around/after the effective date (Exhibit 4). FTSE China A50 additions have outperformed deletions ahead of the announcement as well, while historical patterns suggest a post-announcement reversal, followed by a recovery around the effective date (Exhibit 5).
