China Yangtze Power Co. | Asia Pacific

SG NDR Key Takeaways

CYPC remains positioned as a high-quality defensive utility with strong cash-flow generation, declining financing costs, and increasing strategic value within a more renewable-intensive electricity system.

Key Takeaways

- CYPC's high proportion of long-term contracted electricity sales limits short-term price volatility.
- Hydropower's flexibility (30GW daily peak-shaving capacity) and environmental value should become increasingly important as China's power system evolves.
- CYPC will maintain the >70% dividend payout ratio.
- Capex during the 15th FYP will be concentrated on pumped-storage projects, expansion of existing hydropower assets, and selective strategic investments.
- After funding dividends and capex, CYPC intends to use excess cash to reduce debt and optimize its liability structure.

Hydro tariff in the LT = Energy value + capacity value + green value: Market-based electricity accounted ~36% of the company's total electricity sales in 2025. Within the market-based segment, ~98% of electricity is sold through medium- and long-term contracts. As a result, only a small proportion is directly exposed to spot-market price volatility. Management emphasized that electricity market reform should not automatically be interpreted as negative for hydropower pricing: 1) Hydropower units can start and stop rapidly, typically within approximately 10 minutes; 2) Reservoir-based hydropower offers strong peak-shaving and system-balancing capabilities; 3) Hydropower has green and environmental value through green certificates, although this value is not yet fully tradable or monetized.

Dividend policy and B/S management: CYPC will maintain at least 70% dividend payout ratio. After funding dividends and capital expenditure, the company intends to use excess cash to reduce debt and optimize its liability structure. The company's average financing cost is currently below 3%, while newly issued medium- and long-term bonds carry interest rates below 2%. This creates further potential to reduce financing costs through refinancing and liability management.

El Niño: Current forecasts suggest that a strong El Niño event may emerge in the autumn. Historically, the year following a strong El Niño event has sometimes experienced higher precipitation and stronger river inflows. Management cited the 1997–1998 period as an example, when a strong El Niño event in 1997 was followed by severe flooding in the Yangtze River basin in 1998. However, management did not indicate that this relationship is certain. Actual generation and inflow conditions will continue to depend on observed rainfall, weather patterns, and reservoir conditions.

More details

15th FYP to focus on existing hydropower expansion, pumped storage and strategic investments: 1) It plans to expand Gezhouba and Xiangjiaba by a combined 2.2GW over the next five years. The expansion is intended to address bottlenecks in the coordinated operation of the six-reservoir system, improve dispatch efficiency, and reduce water spillage. 2) Incremental investment will primarily target pumped-storage hydropower. It has approved five projects with a combined capacity of 6.8GW, which are expected to commence operations around 2030. These projects are expected to generate positive free cash flow approximately six to seven years after commissioning. 3) It will also undertake a limited number of renewable energy projects, mainly focused on integrated hydro-wind-solar development. 4) Equity investments will focus on assets in the middle and lower reaches of the Jinsha River. Such investments must offer clear strategic or operational synergies with the company's existing portfolio. The company intends to hold these investments for the long term rather than engage in secondary-market trading.

EPS accretion and strategic importance remain the key investment criterion:

Management indicated that the company's current ROE is approximately 15%, while returns on new projects are expected to be lower than those of its existing hydropower portfolio. However, management emphasized that investment decisions are not based solely on project-level ROE. Continued investment is considered essential to maintaining the company's strategic importance within China's power system and preserving its bargaining power in future electricity pricing negotiations. Accordingly, management places greater emphasis on whether new projects are accretive to EPS over the long term, rather than simply maximizing ROE.

Valuation Methodology and Risks

China Yangtze Power Co. (600900.SS)

Our price target is derived from a discounted cash flow (DCF) methodology, as we believe the company can generate stable profit and cash flows from its hydropower stations. We use a WACC of 6.7% and assume no terminal growth. Our WACC reflects a corporate cost of equity of 8.8%, an after-tax cost of debt of 3% and a target debt-to-capital ratio of 36.2%.

Risks to Upside

1) Better-than-expected hydropower resources; 2) better-than-expected dividend payout ratio; 3) better-than-expected hydropower utilization hours; 4) higher-than-expected renewable energy capacity expansion.

Risks to Downside

1) Weaker-than-expected hydropower resources; 2) lower-than-expected dividend payout ratio; 3) lower-than-expected renewable energy capacity expansion.
