When I was marketing in Singapore-Hong Kong in Feb, foreign investors were clear that one has to position for data-centers even within India and the wave is yet to hit (they have been right till now!). One can invest via i) Equipment plays (diesel genset, optic fiber, electrical equipment, transmission, etc., especially those with US exposure), or ii) Utilities, or iii) Companies building-owning the data-centers. In this note - we focus on the latter two asset heavy plays. We look at what happened in US and learnings for India. Eventually it all comes down to access to electricity!

a) Data Center traction: Our industry discussions highlight that given the M.East crisis DC capacity in India is likely to go to the higher end of the expected 5-8GW range by 2030 (from 1.5 GW today). There is a big fight for land in Navi-Mumbai (we hear even higher than last transactions - Exhibit 13) and substation access for DCs. On capex, ex of compute it is ~Rs 50 Cr/MW (lower than the US).

b) Asset owners: Business models - 2 operating models on DC owners: i) Real estate landlords (don't own compute hardware)- colocation: Build and lease out DC infra to hyperscalers/ neocloud/ enterprises (who bring their own compute hardware) in long term contracts. E.g. DLR, Equinix- covered by Madison. ii) Cloud providers (compute hardware owners): Own GPUs and may or may not own the physical data center. Neoclouds provide rentals of fully developed GPU clusters (e.g. CRWV- covered by Madison, IREN which own infra as well- covered by Gautam Chhugani). Neoclouds can generate ~8-10x higher revenue per IT MW than co-location, but require much higher capex (~$45Mn vs. $8-15Mn), have shorter contracts, and carry tech obsolescence risk when compared to co-location models. Payback period for the co-location model is ~5 years (Exhibit 4). Right to win- With ~ 6 yr avg. wait time in US for interconnect (Exhibit 9), access to power in the right region is the biggest right to win. Even crypto miners with power off-take agreements are pivoting to DC colocation model. Valuations - DC operators like Equinix and Digital Realty are trading at ~22-23x 12m fwd EV/EBITDA, in line with recent DC transactions- Blackstone(covered by Patrick Davitt) acquisition of AirTrunk at ~21x. DC in India (Exhibit 12): Given land x power is the differentiator - the dominance of Adani Group (largest renewable, private thermal, and transmission player in India) is unmatched, followed by Reliance industries (0.5 Mn acres in Gujarat and >5K acres in Navi Mumbai, not covered).

c) Utilities: In US, there is a big divergence in performance of utilities - Vistra, Constellation Energy, and NRG have become 4-8x in last 4 years, whereas others like NextEra, Dominion have remained muted-(none covered, Exhibit 16 Exhibit 17). Drivers- i) Dispatchable open capacity (Gas and Nuclear) in the right region: All 3 winners had significant capacity in PJM and ERCOT (biggest DC markets). PJM capacity prices rose from ~$29/MW-day in 2024/25 to ~$329/MW-day for 2026/27). ii) Access to land and behind-the-meter co-location (could this be game changer for Torrent's gas plant?). iii) Premium for clean dispatchable power - Big Nuclear deals. Even coal plants benefited indirectly with retirement of >4.4 GW of coal capacity pushed out. Indian Beneficiaries? Adani group completely dominates merchant power market and even future capacity addition - with their large land parcel, grid connectivity and locked thermal equipment (Exhibit 22).

INVESTMENT IMPLICATIONS

Within our coverage on the power generation front, the advantage of Adani Green and even Adani Power to power up data-centers is unmatched, given their large land parcel, transmission connectivity, merchant capacity, and thermal equipment availability. Beyond generators, L&T stands to gain via both play in building the DCs, power plants and even as DC owner operator.

We rate EQIX and DLR Outperform and CRWV Underperform.

WHERE ARE DATA-CENTERS BEING BUILT IN US...

PJM (the Eastern region of US) is the largest data center market in US, while ERCOT (Texas) builds have taken off relatively recently. Over 2015-25, power demand due to DCs has grown at a CAGR of 23% and 26% in PJM and ERCOT respectively vs 21% for the US (18% ex-PJM and ERCOT)- Exhibit 1. They became DC hubs due to business friendly regulatory environment, large de-regulated wholesale power markets, proximity to high density fiber infra, abundant and relatively cheap land, faster interconnection process, etc. Moreover, generation companies in these regions became natural beneficiaries (like Vitra, Constellation Energy, NRG Energy) as they held dispatchable generation assets critical for 24x7 power supply to the data centers.

US AI CO-LOCATION/GPU HOSTING SERVICES

There are two primary operating models for AI infrastructure asset owners in the US:

- 1. Real estate landlords (Infra owner, don't own compute hardware) - colocation: In this B2B model, companies lease data center infrastructure to hyperscalers, neocloud operators, or enterprises and earn fixed lease rentals. The customer brings their own GPUs (or, increasingly for inferencing, CPUs). 2 models that have been seen here- a\)DC REITs such as DLR and EQIX, b\)Crypto miners pivoting to AI DC co-location such as Core Scientific, TeraWulf, etc.
- 2. Cloud providers (Own Compute Hardware): Here, companies primarily own GPU hardware while either owning or leasing underlying infrastructure from colocation providers. There are 2 sub-categories to this model- a\)Hyperscalers which offer services such as IaaS, PaaS, GPUaaS, and operate in hybrid models where they own some real estate and lease some, and b\)Neoclouds which are focused on providing GPU services mostly without owning the real estate (e.g., CRWV). For this model, exceptions like IREN exist which own the underlying infrastructure as well.

How have stocks in these categories done: Most US-listed DC asset owners have rallied sharply over the last 2 years- Exhibit 2.

How do these models differ? Exhibit 3: Neocloud operators (including IREN) can generate 8-10x higher revenue per IT MW than co-location players, but at the cost of significantly higher capex, shorter contract duration, and greater technology obsolescence risk. Since capex is incurred upfront while revenues ramp over time, these models can drive a sharp rise in leverage. In contrast, colocation is more capital-efficient and shifts GPU ownership and technology risk to the customer. Exhibit 4 compares recent co-location deals on key metrics. We expect Indian players to predominantly adopt the colocation model, with hyperscalers supplying GPUs rather than operators taking balance-sheet risk.

WHAT MADE DC ASSET OWNER SUCCESSFUL IN US?

Access to Power in the right location is the right to win- Grid interconnection is the most vital factor for the data center site selection- Exhibit 7. ERCOT's large-load interconnection queue has swelled from 49 GW to 225 GW within a span of ~2.5 years, dominated by data centers- Exhibit 8. Further, it now takes around ~6 years in the US to get a connection to the grid- Exhibit 9.

BTC miners pivot to AI Data Centers: Bitcoin miners have emerged as attractive partners for AI cloud providers- offering pre-secured, scalable power capacity- Exhibit 10 and infrastructure already designed for high-density, compute-intensive operations at a conversion cost of $5-8 Mn/MW- Exhibit 11. This has also driven a sharp re-rating in their valuations, as investors increasingly view them as strategic beneficiaries of AI-led infrastructure demand. Examples include Core Scientific, Applied Digital, IREN, Cipher Digital, etc.

VALUATION - THIS IS WHAT SHOCKED US...

Mature, scaled data center operators like Equinix and Digital Realty currently trade at about 22-23x 12m fwd EV/EBITDA- Exhibit 14 (DC REITs in US are valued on NTM AFFO as they have recurring distributable cashflows, but for comparison purpose we have used EV/EBITDA), broadly in line with recent data center M&A, such as Blackstone and CPP's acquisition of AirTrunk at ~21x. As shown in Exhibit 15, nearly all private-market DC deals have cleared in the ~20-30x band. On the other hand, players with GPU ownership (like CoreWeave and IREN) are trading at much cheaper multiples (7-11x), likely reflecting heavy capex and tech obsolescence risk inherent in their business model. Additionally, AI co-location names are trading at highly elevated multiples likely due to the fact that they remain in early-stage growth with EBITDA yet to materialize at scale.

B) POWER UTILITY WINNERS

If we look at the performance of power utility names in the US since the data-center boom started, we see a very divided front. Over Jan'22-Dec'25, Vistra and Constellation Energy have risen ~8x and NRG ~4x, while most other utilities have barely moved in comparison, Exhibit 16.

EXHIBIT 16: Share price trend for US power generation companies

Two factors are driving this gap - dispatchable generation capacity and location of the plants. The biggest beneficiaries have been companies which were present in ERCOT (Texas) and PJM markets. Even within them the biggest beneficiaries were the ones-

- 1. Having dispatchable available capacity: Building new nuclear plants takes ~10 years, and adding new gas units take ~5 years due to tight supply of gas turbines, with long interconnection queues further adding to the timelines. That means companies that already own large nuclear and gas fleets are in a strong position as data-center demand soars and supply stays constrained.
- 2. Access to land and behind-the-meter colocation: Another advantage is the ability to host data centers directly on land adjacent to large power plants, avoiding congested transmission and interconnection queues. Talen's sale of the 960 MW Cumulus campus next to its Susquehanna nuclear plant to AWS, alongside long-term PPAs, shows how such co-location lets hyperscalers secure firm, carbon-free power while generators unlock long term contracted revenue.
- 3. Premium for nuclear - clean dispatchable power: Scarcity of firm, carbon-free baseload power attracted hyperscalers willing to sign long-term nuclear PPAs at significant premiums to spot and forward market prices. Exhibit 18 gives recent PPAs signed between hyperscalers and nuclear power producers (Vistra and Constellation Energy).

In-direct beneficiaries have been coal plants as well - Over May'25-Mar'26, the U.S. DOE had issued 43 emergency orders deferring the retirement of at least 4.4 GW of coal capacity, largely driven by rising power demand from data centers. Further, there have also been reports about Microsoft delaying its 2030 target of 100% RE due to energy-intensive build-out of data centers.

The gains for some of these generators is visible in power market and locked in prices:

a) Surge in capacity market and wholesale power prices in these regions: PJM runs a forward capacity market that pays generators “capacity revenues” simply for committing to be available during future peak-demand periods, on top of whatever they earn from selling energy. PJM capacity prices rose- from ~$29/MW-day for 2024/25 to ~$270/MW-day for 2025/26, and then to $329/MW-day for 2026/27. At the same time, they were also benefited due to their ability to sell a large share of their generation at higher wholesale prices in PJM and EROCT when power prices spiked- Exhibit 19

b) Higher all-in realized prices locked by generators: Companies like Vistra have already locked-in their nuclear and gas capacities at higher realized prices for 2026 and 2027, at a premium to hub prices, which also helps them to protect the downside.

WHO WILL BENEFIT AMONG INDIAN UTILITIES?

If we look at learnings from US, having dispatchable open power capacity can be a huge advantage for power generators as Data-center capex picks up and speed to market becomes critical. In India, the Adani group (across power and green) completely dominates merchant power market and even future capacity addition - with their large land parcel, grid connectivity and locked thermal equipments. We expect DCs to be ambivalent to color of power, although they might not sign a direct contract with a thermal company, via an intermediary (either DISCOM or trader like Adani Energy Solutions - not covered), they are fine to source thermal as well to our understanding.
