

China: Three things in China

Three quick highlights from China:

- Trump-Xi meeting: US President Trump finished his visit to Beijing on May 15, but the specifics of any trade and tariff agreements have not been announced beyond a high-level summary by China's Ministry of Commerce and US President Trump's comments to the media. While the Chinese official readout described "a constructive US-China relationship of strategic stability" for the next three years and emphasized the importance of the Taiwan question, the White House posting focused on Chinese purchases of US goods, the reopening of the Strait of Hormuz, and controlling fentanyl. Taken together, although structural tensions remain, the summit suggests a lower near-term risk of further escalation. The two leaders are expected to meet three more times this year, in September, November, and December.
- PPI upside surprise: China's April inflation prints beat expectations, with CPI rising 1.2% yoy (vs. Bloomberg consensus of 0.9%) and PPI rising 2.8% yoy (vs. Bloomberg consensus of 1.8%). The much stronger-than-expected PPI inflation was driven mostly by upstream sectors. For example, PPI for petroleum mining and processing jumped 28.6% yoy and 14.2% yoy, respectively, while PPI for nonferrous metals mining and processing climbed 38.9% yoy and 22.5% yoy, respectively. Further increases in PPI inflation over the next month or two could prompt the PBOC to normalize liquidity from its currently extremely ample levels.

- Household deleveraging: April money and credit data missed expectations, and the stock of total social financing (TSF) grew 7.8% yoy (vs. 7.9% yoy in March). We revised down our full-year TSF growth forecast from 8.5% to 8.0% following the weak April credit data. RMB loans to households were particularly weak. Total outstanding household loans declined 0.7% yoy in April. PBOC data show that the household debt-to-GDP ratio fell from a peak of 62.3% in 2024Q1 to 59.4% at the end of last year. The latest credit data suggest that household deleveraging continued in the first four months of 2026.

Net new RMB loans to households remained negative in April
