Agentic shopping burst onto the US Retail scene last October after Walmart announced its partnership with ChatGPT.¹ More than six months later, how agentic is shopping today?

We tested five different tools. Three are foundational AI models - ChatGPT, Gemini, and Claude - with broad capabilities. The other two, Amazon's Alexa and Walmart's Sparky, are retail-native AI tools built directly on top of retail ecosystems. The goal was to see how each approaches the shopping funnel: from identifying the right product, to validating pricing, and actually enabling a purchase. More importantly, we assess where each tool breaks down and how far we are from a true end-to-end agentic e-commerce experience. While human interaction is still needed at every stage, payment is where the whole experience unravels. Even in the simplest case - buying a single, generic item - the hand off from "AI found it" to "I bought it" still requires the user to engage. Until payment is embedded directly into the experience, AI remains one step removed from making shopping decisions on behalf of users.

Underpinning that is a tension between general and retailer-integrated systems. The foundational AI models feel powerful because they can roam freely, comparing products, surfacing deals, and stitching together options across a fragmented retail landscape. However, they are doing so without direct access to the structured catalog data, real-time pricing, inventory, or delivery options. Meanwhile, those retail ecosystems have the opposite problem: they are highly precise and almost-transaction-ready, but confined to their own assortment (1P and/or 3P). Bridging this gap, from either end, will be key as the technology evolves.

BUYING ONE ITEM - REQUIRES INTEGRATION!

We evaluated how effective each AI assistant is through each step of the basic e-commerce process for one item, from product discovery to final transaction execution: I want to make scrambled eggs, but I've run out of milk. Could you please find me a 64 fl oz carton of organic whole milk? How soon can it be delivered to me in ZIP 22201 (Arlington, VA)? Exhibit 1 shows each AI tool's performance at each stage.

EXHIBIT 1: Amazon Alexa and Walmart Sparky currently maintain an advantage in real-time pricing accuracy, total cost estimation, and transaction execution.

There is currently no agentic shopping tool capable of buying a product in an unsupervised fashion. Human engagement is needed at many steps.

ChatGPT, Claude, and Gemini are primarily research and recommendation tools. Because they lack direct access to retailers' assortment (unless shared by retailers directly), they seem to rely on workarounds such as web scraping or third-party articles (Exhibit 2). Therefore, they sometimes struggle with SKU identification and pricing accuracy. In addition, they are incapable of handling fulfillment and payment (in so far as they lack a connection). As a result, these are product discovery tools. However, they are partnering with retailers to bridge the gap. ChatGPT, for example, has introduced its Agentic Commerce Protocol (ACP), and Claude integrates with Uber Eats to enable grocery and food delivery (Exhibit 6). Still, users need to follow links to retailers' websites to complete transactions.

In contrast, Amazon and Walmart operate fundamentally differently. Their AI assistants have access to the real time inventory data. This allows them to manage the entire purchase funnel within their ecosystems, from product discovery through payment. Amazon's implementation illustrates both the potential and the limitations of this approach. Alexa can add non-perishable items to a cart (Exhibit 7) but currently excludes Amazon Fresh and Whole Foods products (Exhibit 8). There are still limitations at the final step. The payment process is not fully integrated within either Sparky or Alexa, so users cannot complete the transaction directly within the assistant.

EXHIBIT 2: ChatGPT can identify the SKU and estimate an approximate price range, but appears to rely on web scraping at times.

Whole Foods link, in exhibit, directs to an article on Whole Foods delivery policy.

I want to make scrambled eggs, but I've run out of milk. Could you please find me a 64 fl oz carton of organic whole milk? How soon can it be delivered to me in zip 22201 (Arlington, VA)?

EXHIBIT 3: With the initial prompt, Gemini suggests relevant product and delivery options but does not identify items at the SKU level.

It also appears to rely on online scraping to generate its responses.

For your immediate cooking needs in zip code 22201 (Arlington, VA), you have a few highly efficient options to secure a 64 fl oz carton of organic whole milk (commonly available from trusted organic brands like Horizon Organic, Organic Valley, or Stonyfield):

On-Demand & Instant Delivery (Fastest)

If you are mid-recipe and need it immediately, delivery apps are your best option:

- Instacart, DoorDash, or Uber Eats: You can order a 64 oz carton directly from local stores right in your neighborhood (such as the Safeway on Wilson Blvd or the Whole Foods Market in Clarendon).
- Delivery Speed: These services typically offer on-demand rush delivery that can arrive at your door in 30 to 60 minutes.

Same-Day Store Services

If you have a bit more flexibility later in the day:

- Safeway Flash / DriveUp & Go: The Safeway location at 1525 Wilson Blvd handles rapid fulfillment online, often preparing "Flash" delivery orders or window pickups in 30 minutes or less. Safeway
- Amazon Fresh / Whole Foods Market: Standard same-day delivery slots for the Arlington area are usually available within a 2-hour window depending on current courier availability. Dragonfly

To get it fastest, checking DoorDash or Instacart mapped to your exact street address will show you the precise real-time courier ETA, which should easily be under an hour.

EXHIBIT 4: This is not due to a lack of capability. When prompted further, such as asking for the price of the milk, Gemini is able to retrieve SKU-level product information.

what's the price of the milk

In the Arlington, VA area (zip 22201), a 64 fl oz carton of organic whole milk generally ranges between $4.69 and $7.49 depending on the store brand and specific label:

- Store Brands (Most Affordable):
 - Whole Foods (365 Brand): $4.69 per 64 oz carton. Whole Foods Market
- Premium National Brands:
 - Organic Valley: $6.29 per 64 oz carton. Whole Foods Market
 - Horizon Organic: $6.99 (Standard Whole Milk) to $7.49 (DHA Omega-3 formula) per 64 oz carton.

Note: If you order through a third-party application like Instacart or DoorDash, the base price may be slightly marked up by $0.50 to $1.00, and standard delivery fees/service tips will apply.

EXHIBIT 5: Similar to Gemini, Claude initially presents delivery options along with item recommendations and approximate delivery times.

I want to make scrambled eggs, but I've run out of milk. Could you please find me a 64 fl oz carton of organic whole milk? How soon can it be delivered to me in zip 22201 (Arlington, VA)?

Shopping and grocery delivery isn't something I can search directly, but here are some great options for getting organic whole milk delivered quickly to Arlington, VA (22201):

Same-day or fast delivery options:

- Instacart (instacart.com) — connects to local stores like Whole Foods, Safeway, Giant, and more. Often delivers in 1-2 hours.
- Amazon Fresh — if you're a Prime member, same-day or next-day delivery is common in Arlington.
- Whole Foods (via Amazon) — Prime members often get free 2-hour delivery.
- DoorDash / Uber Eats — both partner with grocery stores and can deliver in under an hour from nearby locations.

For a 64 fl oz carton of organic whole milk, brands like Organic Valley, Horizon Organic, or 365 by Whole Foods are widely available through all of the above.

Arlington is very well-served by these services, so same-day delivery within 1-2 hours is very likely. In the meantime, for your scrambled eggs — a small splash of water or a bit of cream cheese actually works wonderfully as a milk substitute!

EXHIBIT 6: Through its partnership with Uber Eats, Claude enables users to complete purchases via Uber Eats directly within the interface.

I don't have a grocery delivery connector available to place orders directly. Let me see if there's one I can suggest for you!

Unfortunately there's no grocery delivery connector (like Instacart or Amazon Fresh) available to connect right now. The closest option I found is Uber Eats, which does partner with some grocery stores:

Uber Eats is one option — would you like to connect it to search for grocery stores near you? BUILDING A GROCERY BASKET - DESIGN CHOICES GUIDE LLM'S

Beyond finding and buying a single item, we tested AI agents' ability to build a grocery basket. It requires translating a multi-day meal plan into a complete grocery basket, estimating appropriate quantities for a family of four, and accounting for constraints such as a nut allergy. In addition, it assesses the ability to demonstrate contextual awareness, organize items and avoid duplication. The prompt is:

Household description: family of four (two adults and two children, ages 6 and 10) living in New York City, with a total household income of $100,000. This family has nut allergies. [Inserted Exhibit 10 as list]. Please build me a grocery basket for this week. Thank you!

EXHIBIT 10: We fed this meal plan as text into the prompt.

We kept meal choices rudimentary, this isn't a culinary exercise.

Meal / Day	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
Breakfast	Yogurt	Scrambled eggs	Oatmeal	Waffles	Bagels with cream cheese
Lunch	Turkey sandwich	Chicken and rice	Ham wrap and snacks	PB&J	Salad and fruit
Dinner	Tacos	Spaghetti	Meat loaf and mash potatoes	Fried rice with eggs and vegetables	Pizza and Fries

EXHIBIT 11: Foundational LLMs are better at understanding context while retail-integrated models provide SKU-level detail.

	Is it a list?	Is it a basket?	Pricing	Add to cart
ChatGPT	●	●	●	●
Gemini	●	●	●	●
Claude	●	●	●	●
Amazon Alexa	●	●	●	●
Walmart Sparky	●	●	●	●

Definitions - List: A set of relevant product suggestions based on the user's request; Basket: A structured collection of specific SKUs selected for purchase; Pricing: The accuracy and reasonableness of the price information provided for each item; Add to Cart: The capability of a shopping tool to add selected items directly into a virtual cart for purchase.

Design choices guide performance in this task. The foundational LLM's understand the complexity in full, and are able to provide detailed answers. However, there is no clear link down the funnel, so the output is (for now) more akin to a shopping list. Alexa operates best within Amazon's shelf-stable assortment, while Fresh items are not yet available. This could be by choice, or for a lack of wiring in the back end. Sparky takes a completely different approach and provides product recommendations in the context of recipes. Is this computationally more efficient? It generates recipes that loosely align with the requested meals. Each recipe can be opened in detail, and from there, users can add all required ingredients to their cart with accurate pricing, creating a smooth path from idea to purchase. Once again, human engagement is required.

ChatGPT, Gemini, and Claude generate comprehensive shopping lists that operate at the ingredient level, not at SKU-level. These platforms understand the full scope of the request: processing the five-day meal plan, accounting for family size, and flagging the nut allergy constraint to suggest appropriate substitutions. They can infer that "tacos" require tortillas, ground meat, cheese, lettuce, and salsa, then aggregate ingredients across multiple meals to avoid duplication. Eggs purchased for Tuesday's breakfast could also cover Thursday's fried rice. However, this output resembles a traditional handwritten shopping list, rather than a stoppable basket. Users must still translate these ingredient-level recommendations into specific brand and size selections when actually purchasing, whether through manual shopping or searching within a grocery app. This again reflects the lack of integration into a retail ecosystem.

Amazon's Alexa provides SKU-level specificity with direct add-to-cart functionality but sacrificing meal planning comprehensiveness. When the assistant suggests only pizza dough for Friday's "pizza and fries" dinner, Amazon's AI appears optimized to identify concrete product requests and map them to its catalog, but struggles with the inferential leap required to understand that "pizza" implies not just dough but also sauce, cheese, and toppings, while "fries" requires frozen fries or potatoes and oil. Alexa's advantage is its ability to check out across part of Amazon's shelf-stable assortment. For fresh items, it is also easily directed to the page and the item, although checkout is not integrated in the AI tool yet.

Sparky appears to operate as a content recommendation engine pulling from a recipe database. For instance, it treats allergy information as context rather than a hard filter. Similarly, the absence of basket consolidation (suggesting items meal-by-meal rather than creating a week-long shopping list) indicates the system is optimized for individual transaction moments rather than comprehensive planning.

EXHIBIT 12: While Amazon Alexa takes allergies into account, it falls short of assembling complete meals.

Got it! Here's a full grocery basket for your 5-day meal plan, tailored for a family of 4 with a nut allergy. I've flagged the Thursday PB&J — since peanut butter is a nut product, I've swapped it with SunButter (sunflower seed butter), which is 100% nut-free and a perfect kid-friendly alternative! All items with same-day delivery are available in NYC today.

⚠️ Nut Allergy Note: Please double-check all packaged product labels, especially the sliced ham (Wellshire Farms notes it may be processed on shared equipment with tree nuts) and other deli items, to confirm they're safe for your family.

- Walmart could fail in new business ventures, including e-commerce and advertising, which would threaten its ability to achieve long-term revenue and margin targets.
- Increased regulatory scrutiny in the US given Walmart's leading position in US grocery.

Target Corp

Our TGT price target is subject to several macroeconomic and company-specific risks. Upside risks include:

- Relaunches in the apparel and home categories work, with growth and gross margins inflecting.
- Target could benefit from a rebound in consumer demand for discretionary products (e.g. from stimulus) and experience less share loss than in recent years, which could lead to stronger than expected sales growth and margin recovery.
- Target's e-commerce business could see profitability improve faster than expected, which could pose upside risks to our forecast.

Downside risks include:

- Productivity measures don't materialize as expected, and EBIT margins suffer near-term.
- Strong momentum seen at the beginning of Q1 fades, putting the broader turnaround into question.
- Ancillary revenue growth slows, particularly in Roundel (advertising).
