- 0001-Aluminium End~U：■We maintain our 0 – 3-month aluminium price forecast of $3,000/t and remain broadly neutral in the near term.

- Bernstein：Stats were good-to-great, funding concerns were addressed, the strategic moves make sense, and, much as we were after 2Q earnings, we ’re left grappling with our Underperform.

- Bernstein：Our normal, full pipeline dataset casts a deliberately wide net across the North American market: operating facilities, canceled projects, land banks, announcements, and projects already under construction.

- Bernstein：With no imminent change to Europe ’s relative cost position, earnings momentum at least becoming less negative, and Chemicals market caps / index weights declining, M&A could tick up with BASF-Evonik (NC) at the vanguard.

- Bernstein：Residential has been weak, with an end market that has only gotten weaker, but investor focus has been on the Non- Residential side: How much will the data center construction contribute to sales?

- Bernstein：We address both in this analytical note, modeling the bottom-up FY27 business mix and laying out bull / base / bear scenarios for the 5-yr earnings pathway.

- Bernstein：The diversification story appears well on track as they continue to overdeliver especially on automotive, and begin to ramp their datacenter business in a bigger way as we move toward the company ’s FY29 targets;…
