KEY NUMBERS:

- Domestic CGPI, mom, May: +0.9%, April: +2.8%
- Domestic CGPI, yoy, May: +6.3%, April: +5.3%
- Export price (yen basis), mom, May: +0.4%, April: +4.1%
- Import price (yen basis), mom, May: +2.7%, April: +8.7%

MAIN POINTS:

Domestic CGPI rises further, but increase rate decelerates from April for most categories: The domestic corporate goods price index (CGPI) decelerated from a +2.8% mom increase in April—which was the sharpest rise since April 1980 (+3.1%), excluding the effects of consumption tax hikes—but still rose +0.9% mom in May. This is because the sharp price increases seen across many items in April due to the impact of price revisions temporarily settled down in May. However, reflecting the price revisions in April, the index accelerated in yoy terms to +6.3% (April: +5.3%), the largest increase since March 2023 (+7.4%).

A breakdown shows a continued impact from the situation in the Middle East, but the mom rate of increase decelerated from April for most categories. Petroleum & coal products rose +3.0% mom, pushing up the overall index by 0.21 pp, but this marked a deceleration from +11.8% mom and a contribution of 0.75 pp in April. However, in yoy terms, prices accelerated sharply to +13.8% (April: +5.3%). Of these, gasoline rose +2.4% mom, and heavy oil rose +3.7%. Naphtha was flat in May, after surging +83.2% in April. As naphtha prices tend to be reviewed every three months, the next price revision would normally be in July. Large price increases were also seen for chemical products (+2.3% mom; contribution: +0.19 pp) and electric power, gas & water (+3.5% mom; contribution: +0.19 pp), but both decelerated from April. Meanwhile, among the 23 major categories, prices declined mom for four categories (production machinery, business-oriented machinery, electrical machinery, and agricultural, forestry & fishery products).

Yen-based import prices continue to rise on petroleum-related products, but mom pace decelerates from April's surge: Import prices (yen basis) continued to rise, increasing +2.7% mom, but the pace decelerated compared to +8.7% in April. In yoy terms, the index accelerated to +25.5% (April: +21.0%). Petroleum, coal & natural gas rose +8.0% mom, pushing up the overall index by 1.7 pp, but this marked a sharp deceleration from +27.3% in April. Import prices also rose for categories such as chemical products (+1.7%) and metals & metal products (+1.2%), but the rate of increase remained small. Ethylene, which is included in chemical products, fell -4.1% mom in May after rising +69.0% in April. In addition, import prices for foods & beverages and machinery-related categories turned negative mom.

Meanwhile, yen-based export prices also rose, albeit slightly, by +0.4% mom (April: +4.1%), and posted double-digit growth in yoy terms at +20.6% (April: +19.1%). In particular, export prices for electrical & electronic equipment showed high growth, rising +3.7% mom and +35.6% yoy.
