We update our memory & industry models (models for HBM, DRAM, NAND, Samsung, SK hynix, Micron & KIOXIA) & maintain Outperform ratings on Samsung, SK hynix & Micron & Underperform on KIOXIA.

HBM price needs to go higher to narrow the profitability gap vs. conventional DRAM.

From 3QCY25 to 2QCY26, conventional DRAM price has risen c. 4.5x, but HBM price is locked by annual contracts and hasn't moved. As the result, we estimate in CY26 deploying capacity to conventional DRAM will generate over 2x revenue & nearly 3x gross profit dollar per wafer capacity vs. HBM. This is why memory suppliers and GPU/XPU companies are negotiating CY27 HBM price now to narrow the gap.

The possible “markup” of GPU/XPU suppliers will amplify the cost burden on hyperscalers. Unlike conventional DRAM & NAND that hyperscalers can source directly from memory suppliers, HBM is packaged in GPUs/XPUs and is part of the COGS of, for example, NVIDIA. NVIDIA needs to mark up the HBM price hike 4x if NVIDIA has 75% gross margin & wants to keep 75% unchanged, despite the HBM price hike. This will make the HBM price hike even a heavier burden for hyperscalers.

With memory making hyperscalers' capex 30% higher, a “re-calibration” is inevitable and may squeeze weaker suppliers. Using Vera Rubin (VR, NVL72) rack as an example, hyperscalers will find their capex higher by 30% if they deploy a data center with this rack and with the same memory capacity installed in the rack, because of higher conventional DRAM & NAND cost, higher HBM cost & the markup charged by NVIDIA. With funding availability and competitive pressure, we think hyperscalers will still invest in AI, but may try to “re-calibrate” their costs across different component suppliers (& possibly even token prices across different customers too?).

To reflect higher HBM price, a notable earnings revision is coming to support the stock prices of Samsung, SK hynix Micron but not KIOXIA. We raise HBM price 2-2.5x, not as much as the size of conventional DRAM price hike, as we assume memory suppliers recognize the strategic value of HBM and choose to price less aggressively. We update our forecast & find our FY27 EPS 25-40% above consensus as the result. As HBM negotiation gradually concludes in the next few months, we expect consensus to move upward and to provide an upward support to the stock of Samsung, SK hynix and Micron, but not KIOXIA as KIOXIA has only NAND & does not have HBM. Please note this also means higher HBM exposure will result lower profitability for memory suppliers.

MediaTek may benefit if hyperscalers prefer to source HBM directly to avoid the possible markup. The stock went up c. 130% in the past 2 months but we reiterate Outperform.

Reiterate Outperform on Samsung, SK hynix and Micron too. We raise target price to KRW440,000 for Samsung (6.2x 1-year forward P/E), KRW3,300,00 for SK hynix (6.2x 1-year forward P/E), and US$1,300 for Micron (7.7x 1-year forward P/E). Maintain Underperform on KIOXIA (see KIOXIA: All parties come to an end - Underperform).

INVESTMENT IMPLICATIONS

Samsung, SK hynix, Micron: We maintain Outperform on Samsung, SK hynix and Micron and raise price targets to KRW440,000 (vs 225,000), KRW3,300,000 (vs 1,150,000) and US$1,300 (vs 510) respectively, driven by increased forecasts of conventional memory pricing as well as HBM pricing going forward. We now value them using 1-year forward P/E and target 6.2x for Samsung, 6.2x for SK hynix and 7.7x for Micron.

DETAILS

Please feel free to download our industry (DRAM, NAND, CoWoW/HBM) and company models (Samsung, SK hynix, Micron & KIOXIA).

We think HBM price will be higher. And added with the "markup" on HBM, the increase will make AI feel the burden of memory price hike too. A "re-calibration" to share the cost burden is probably inevitable.

- As a result of the DRAM supply shortage, and skyrocketing conventional DRAM prices, we think HBM price is also bound to go up next year, by 2-2.5x vs this year (Exhibit 1-Exhibit 2), and will exert a heavy pressure on server rack cost and also hyperscaler capex. The cost pressure possibly won't be limited to just the higher purchase cost of HBM stacks paid to memory suppliers. Take NVIDIA as an example. HBM is packaged inside NVIDIA's GPUs, and the HBM cost paid memory suppliers is part of NVIDIA's COGS. Simply passing through this HBM cost increase to NVIDIA's customers will dilute NVIDIA's gross margin. Assume NVIDIA earns 75% gross margin on the VR200 racks, NVIDIA will need to increase its rack price by 4x the cost increase of HBM in order to maintain margin at 75%.
- We estimate before the HBM price increase HBM was 5% of VR200 price that NVIDIA charges. With the HBM price increase alone, the selling price of VR200 needs to be higher by 6% price increase. If NVIDIA marks up by 4x to keep gross margin at 75%, the rack price can go up by 24%. For a hyperscaler deploying VR200 racks, its total data center capex (including out-of-rack capex) needs to go up by 4% if only HBM cost is passed on, or 15% if all markup is included. Additionally, conventional DRAM and NAND prices have both gone up substantially too, and contribute another 14% increase to the total data center capex (Exhibit 3). All together with 2-2.5x HBM price increase+markup, and conventional DRAM & NAND price increase (& no markup), we find hyperscalers' AI capex needs to be higher by 30% just to cover higher memory costs. Should they build their ROI analysis based on the original budget of VR200, they likely now need to redo the analysis with "I" (investment) 30% higher than original.
- In summary, the burden of memory price hike is now propagating from consumer applications to AI too. Hyperscalers need to redo their ROI analysis, as memory is now making the investment requirement bigger. Given the competitive pressure and funding availability, we don't think this will make hyperscalers slow down AI investments. A "re-calibration" is however inevitable, so that hyperscalers, supply chain & maybe even token price together make adjustments to cope with the burden. Weaker suppliers may be squeezed in this "re-calibration" but companies in our coverage are well positioned and some may emerge as a beneficiary of this "re-calibration".
- Please note that the analysis here isn't perfect and the estimate is simply a ballpark one. First it is very possible that hyperscalers will mix VR200 servers with those with other accelerators and/or with CPUs only for different computation and agentic needs. Further some conventional DRAM and NAND will be pre-installed in the servers shipped by NVIDIA and hence may be subject to markups. The analysis above however for simplistic sake assumes no markups - essentially assuming NVIDIA allows customers to weigh truer computation needs against memory cost and all conventional DRAM & NAND are installed by customers. Finally, GPU & accelerator providers may argue the existence of the markups on HBM. They will highlight HBM being an integral part of the entire system, and the integration of HBM with logic dies, package, and other components in the rack & software. They may hence argue that they charge no markups on HBM, & treat HBM just as "pass-through" revenue but deserve high margin on the rest of the system. In any case, it is true the HBM is part of the COGS of these GPUs/accelerators and the gross margin % of these GPU/accelerators suppliers will contract if they simply pass the higher HBM cost downward without a markup. They will be tempted to charge a markup if they would like to defend the gross margin %, but that as discussed above resulting in an amplified capex burden on hyperscalers.

EXHIBIT 3: We estimate HBM price increase, its cost markup, and also DRAM & NAND price increase together require nearly 30% increase in AI data center capex.

The profitability of HBM may stay below that of conventional memory next year should suppliers recognize the strategic value of HBM and price HBM less aggressively.

- Conventional DRAM price is expected to have moved up by ~4.5x by 2QCY26 compared to 3QCY25, and we think prices can possibly rise by another turn in CY27 (or another ~25% from 2QCY26) before peaking (Exhibit 4-Exhibit 5). As a result of that, conventional DRAM now enjoys similar if not higher ASP per bit than HBM. And given its higher bit density and yield, conventional DRAM, we estimate, will generate 2x revenue per wafer capacity vs. HBM this year (Exhibit 6), and command a notably higher margins too (Exhibit 7). Both Samsung and Micron clearly said non-HBM DRAM margin was already ahead of HBM margin in their 1QCY26 earnings calls, as conventional DRAM price keeps climbing, the margin gap between the two keeps widening.

- Given conventional DRAM price may rise further next year, we think memory suppliers will demand a significant increase in HBM prices to balance the profitability between the two. Samsung in its earnings call also mentioned that it expects the margin differential to be “significantly reduced in 2027”, implying raising HBM prices. We estimate 3x increase in HBM price is needed for HBM revenue per wafer capacity to catch up with conventional DRAM. Some, on the other hand, may argue HBM is a vital part of AI and is critical to the entire AI infrastructure build out. We think suppliers may recognize this and understand that high HBM cost can be unhealthy for overall AI ecosystem development and ultimately to memory demand as well. SK hynix indeed also stressed that it will try to achieve “optimal allocation between HBM and general DRAM”, and will not try to maximize revenue. We hence model 2-2.5x increase in HBM price next year on account of the above considerations (Exhibit 1-Exhibit 2). HBM profitability hence will remain below that of conventional DRAM next year, but the gap should be much smaller than this year.
- Across different HBM suppliers, Samsung we believe now leads in HBM4 technology. Our latest Korea memory export tracker (report link) did find a meaningful increase in export value per weight from Samsung in May, which can be due to HBM4 starting shipment (Exhibit 8). We think this can enable Samsung to grow its HBM market share this year and next year (Exhibit 9-Exhibit 10). However, as mentioned above, more HBM exposure may likely mean less profit for memory suppliers. And we do get the impression that Samsung is more focused on achieving higher profit margins, and hence may choose to deploy more capacity for conventional memory, even with Samsung's technological lead in HBM4.

DRAM stocks will benefit from a rapid upward earnings revision in the near term.

- We believe negotiation of HBM supply for next year is still ongoing and we should hear more news on that in the coming months. And we also don't think this HBM price increase has been fully reflected in the sell-side consensus on Bloomberg. We will elaborate our model revision below, but we're above consensus in CY2027 meaningfully as we incorporate HBM price hike in this revision. We expect other sell-side forecasts to follow and hence a notable upward change to CY2027 consensus soon, which in turn support stock prices to move upward in the near term.

- Please note this HBM revision will only benefit Samsung, SK hynix and Micron. Pure NAND suppliers, such as KIOXIA, do not have HBM and hence will not benefit from this revision.

MediaTek may benefit if hyperscalers demand to source HBM directly to avoid the markup.

- Though we expect NVIDIA & other AI accelerator suppliers to emphasize the importance of integrating HBM with the rest of their offerings and hence continuing having HBM as part of their revenue, many hyperscalers, we believe, will negotiate and try to source HBM directly to avoid the chance of HBM markup. We believe this trend to favor Asian ASIC service providers as their business model allows hyperscalers to do so now.
- MediaTek thus can benefit from this trend. The execution on its first and second TPU project is also solid. Our recent supply chain checks also suggest an upside risk to our 2028 projection. The stock went up ~130% in the past 2 months, but we still see upside and reiterate Outperform.

We raise our projections on stronger conventional DRAM prices and also higher HBM pricing. Based on 6.2-7.7x 1 year forward P/E, we raise target price for Samsung, SK hynix and Micron and see another 15-26% upside. Maintain Outperform.

- We raise forecasts for Samsung, SK hynix and Micron to reflect stronger-than-expected price increase in the near term, but more importantly our CY2027 projections as a result of higher HBM ASP as discussed above. And we are now also notably above consensus in FY27 EPS by 25-38% (Exhibit 11-Exhibit 13). Earnings are forecast to rise almost vertically this year and into next year as well (Exhibit 14-Exhibit 16), and that will keep the stock prices strong.
- We generally see the DRAM shortage to be more acute and remain for longer than we previously expected. We see DRAM prices can remain strong likely for most of CY27. That said we do still believe with more clean rooms coming online, prices will likely soften in CY28. And we hence still model revenue to decline YoY in FY28 for all three companies, that puts us below consensus, which apparently assumes very limited decrease in pricing. Please note that our forecast still has DRAM industry gross margin at 70% exiting CY28, higher than peak margins in all past upcycles only except for CY18 (Exhibit 17).
- Valuing memory companies using P/B is tricky now as margins and return on equity will be reaching unprecedented levels (Exhibit 18). Hence we cannot reference history to identify the right P/B multiple. We also note that cash position will also reach an unprecedented level, also making it complicated to value based on book value (Exhibit 19-Exhibit 24). We hence switch to P/E based valuation, and we believe investors are also increasingly basing their valuation on earnings. We set our target P/E close to historical trough levels to value peak cycle earnings. We raise target price to KRW440,000 for Samsung, at 6.2x 1 year forward P/E, representing 26% upside. SK hynix target price is raised to KRW 3,300,000 at 6.2x forward P/E as well, representing 20% upside. Micron target price is set at US$1,300, at 7.7x P/E, representing 15% upside. We reiterate Outperform ratings on Samsung, SK hynix and Micron.

RISKSSamsung Electronics Co Ltd

The biggest downside risk to our target price is an earlier end of favorable pricing environment, which can be a result of weaker demand or higher supply. Investor sentiment and hence the valuation rewarded by investors is also a risk. China's progress in memory, especially in NAND, is a downside risk too.

Investor sentiment and hence the valuation rewarded by investors is also a risk. China's progress in memory, especially in NAND, is a downside risk too.

Micron Technology Inc

The biggest downside risk to our target price is an earlier end of favorable pricing environment, which can be a result of weaker demand or higher supply. Investor sentiment and hence the valuation rewarded by investors is also a risk. China's progress in memory, especially in NAND, is a downside risk too.

KIOXIA Holdings Corp

Upside risk to our target price include 1) stronger than expected NAND demand growth, which likely would lead to better NAND pricing and hence company earnings, 2) favorable policy support from Japanese government such as capex subsidies, and 3) better than expected cost reduction

MediaTek Inc

There are a number of downside risks to our MediaTek price target: (1) Stronger competitive pressure from Qualcomm in 5G market (2) Slower 5G adoption increase, especially in China (3) Weaker smartphone demand globally (4) Slower diversification beyond smartphone (5) Downturn in the broad semiconductor market
